The defendant, Kern, testified in his own behalf to the effect that he bought the land from Burford in 1899 and moved on it; that Burford pointed out the corners to him; that these corners included the lane; and that he understood he was buying the lane. He admits, however, that Burford told him "Mr. Sanford used that lane." He testified that about three years before the trial (Sanford then having used the lane for several years during Kern's ownership) Sanford wanted to buy a road on his, Kern's, south line, and in that connection he, Sanford, (quoting) "told me I could close up that lane over there. It belonged to me anyhow." As we gather, this last conversation was after the road had been obstructed, and litigation was brewing or had commenced. On cross-examination he admitted that Sanford's proposition relating to closing up the lane was conditioned on Kern's selling him a shorter and more convenient road on the south side of tract A. He further admitted that, when he bought from Burford, Burford told him that Sanford had "fixed a fence through there and is using the road"; further, that Sanford had tried to sell to him before he bought from Burford, and had told him in response to his question, how he would get out of there, that he, Sanford, "claimed the road," and that the lane so claimed by Sanford was open until he, Kern, and Flynn closed it. He also admitted that, while his understanding was that he got the lane because his deed included it in the description of the land, yet that the same description included the Jackson and Pochontas public road. Further along he admitted that, when Sanford talked about buying a road on the south, he, Sanford, told him that, if he "shut up the lane, he would make trouble for him," and reiterated on cross-examination that Mr. Burford had told him before he bought his land that Sanford had that fence put there and had the right to that amination by defendant's attorney, Mr. Sanford reiterated that he had all along asserted his right to the road, and had claimed to own it as against English, Mrs. Baldwin, Burford, Clippard, and Kern.

Plaintiff asked and was refused instructions based on his theory of the law. Defendant asked none. Considering the instructions immaterial to a decision here, they are omitted.

Any other necessary facts will appear in the opinion.

(a) The law of easements is applied to work out justice in cases differing so widely in essential elements that it may be well at the outset to get at the concrete case here by a process of exclusion. For instance, as shown by the record, this is not a case where an easement, resting in a mere permissive license without any consideration passing and having for its basis a mere act of neighborly good will, is sought to be enforced. Nor is it a case where an easement is not claimed as of right, and where the user was not of right. Such cases, therefore, as Pitzman v. Boyce, 111 Mo. 387, 19 S. W. 1104, 33 Am. St. Rep. 536, Fleld v. Mark, 125 Mo. 502, 28 S. W. 1004, and Anthony v. Building Co., 188 Mo. 704, 87 S. W. 921, are not in point. Plaintiff's case at bottom rests on prescription; that is, on adverse user as of right openly and uninterruptedly for more than 10 years. The blunt question, then, is: Do the record facts make such a case? We think so.

(b) In the first place, Sanford's claim to an easement originated in contract. He was not an interloper, squatter, or mere trespasser. This is important as furnishing a foundation for a claim of right, because the statute of limitations, borrowed to effectuate prescriptive rights, can only be invoked by a person claiming by right, and not by wrong. No flux of time will ripen a bad title into a good one unless possession is blessed by a claim of right. In the second place, the contract was executed; that is, performed and the contract consideration passed, the lane was opened, the fence built and accepted. In the third place, the consideration was adequate in law, viz., a fence built by plaintiff for the benefit of Mrs. Baldwin and a detriment suffered by Sanford by furnishing the material and outlay in building that fence in return for a benefit conferred on him, to wit, a private way from his timber land to the Jackson and Pocahontas road. For aught appearing here, the consideration paid was equal or more than equal to the value of the strip of land, as prices ranged in that region in 1889. It is argued for respondent there was no benefit to Mrs. Baldwin, that the whole affair from end to end was simply the gracious bounty of a neighvalue of her holding evidently was impaired by a bad partition fence. Now, breachy stock and a low or broken line fence are the devil's own invention for discords and squabbles between coterminous proprietors—a fecund womb of a miserable brood of infelicities, viz., bad blood, bickering, bloodshed, fuss, litigation. In this case some of those things were hatching. Accordingly, for the good of her pocket and peace of mind, she gave the roadway in return for a fence, presumably horse-high, bull-strong, and hog-tight, as the saying runs. Again, under that contract fully performed, possession was turned over to Sanford. That the neighbors used this open lane when they liked in no way impairs his possession of right. Such acquiescence on his part did not destroy his easement. Such use is usual, and is recognized by our statute, in ways of necessity. Rev. St. 1890, § 9468 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4346). The possession Sanford took and held was not the possession a proprietor would take and hold of his meadow, cornfield, or dooryard, but it was the possession usually taken of an open lane, cut off on both sides by fences, bridged where necessary, kept fit for use by annual repairs, and used continuously by him, his tenants, and those having business on his land as his means of egress and ingress—his market road. It was the best possession the subject-matter was susceptible of. The user was confessedly open, notorious, continuous, and without a word said or finger lifted in antagonism to it until defendant, after the flight of 14 years, built a fence across the lane and visibly asserted a hostile right to the strip.

(c) Was Sanford's use under an adverse claim of right? We think so. The reason of the thing is that a claim of right in essence rests in intent. As there is no window through which we may look into the soul of a man and use our eyesight in spying out his intent, the proof of intent, ex necessitate, rests in acts and words. There may be cases in which acts speak louder than words—where the thing done drowns out the thing said. But in this case the acts of Sanford unmistakably point to a claim of right in the way. So, the things said by him point in the same direction. He claimed the road as of right whenever a question was raised relating to his right during the time he was using it. Not only so, but his claim was recognized by the owners of tract A. We find no difficulty with the case on that score, and, unless something else is in the way, it must be said that he asserted his adverse right to the road by acts and words continuously for more than 10 years accompanied by uninterrupted possession for that time. That a prescriptive right is by a fiction of the law deemed to rest in a grant, or small significance in modern jurisprudence; for it is settled law that the right to a way by prescription may be established in the same way as the title to land, to wit, by adverse possession under a claim of right uninterrupted for ten years.

Says Goode, J., in a well-decided case (Power v. Dean, 112 Mo. App., loc. cit. 297, 86 S. W. 1102): "As she executed no deed, the argument is that an easement, or right to use the strip as a private way, was never granted, because such a grant must be by deed. This proposition is sound, too. But an easement in the nature of a private way may be acquired by prescription or 10 years' adverse use, which is equivalent to a grant. In most cases the law allows the prescriptive right on the fiction of a prior grant of which the evidence is lost. In this case a fictitious grant need not be presumed, as there is proof of a futile attempt at an actual grant. Old theories about prescriptions and presumed grants, though still alluded to in opinions for the sake of seeming consistency, do not have much force in modern law. The question of a prescriptive right depends on adverse use for the limitation period. House v. Montgomery, 19 Mo. App. 170, 179; Pitzman v. Boyce, supra. A right to the private way acquired by adverse use is a vested right and not a license. Autenrieth v. Railroad, 36 Mo. App. 254, 260." The learned judge's formulation of the law is acceptable to us, and is in accord with modern doctrine.

(d) There is a further doctrine comporting with reason and justice and recognized as clear equity, viz., that a license to use a way or an easement, though without consideration at its inception, may not be revoked at will where, from the very nature of the license, the licensee was expected to go to great expense in order to enjoy it, and where that expense has been incurred. In such case equitable estoppel arises and the relations of the parties may not be severed and the easement destroyed at the whim and by the act of the licensor alone. They must be severed, if at all, on equitable principles. Cape Girardeau & T. B. T. R. Co. v. St. L. & G. Ry. Co. (not yet officially reported) 121 S. W. 300; Baker v. Railroad, 57 Mo. 265; Fuhr v. Dean, 26 Mo. 116, 69 Am. Dec. 484; Chiles v. Wallace, 83 Mo., loc. cit. 92 et seq.; School District v. Lindsay, 47 Mo. App. 134; State v. Macy, 72 Mo. App. 427; Gibson v. St. L. A. & M. Ass'n, 33 Mo. App. 165; House v. Montgomery, supra.

(e) In arriving at the conclusions announced, we are not unmindful that Mrs. Baldwin did not have the legal title to the land at the time she contracted with Sanford. She was in possession, clothed with the powers of an apparent owner, and exercised those powers by leasing the land to tenants and enjoying the usufruct. We think she was allowing to have had knowledge she was dealing with it by contracting in relation to it and this with his acquiescence and consent. The evidence is clear that Sanford thought he was dealing with the owner when he contracted with her. Burford, Clippard, and Kern are subvendees holding under her. They bought the land with actual notice of Sanford's claim. We deem it sound doctrine that they were put upon inquiry when they saw an open fenced lane in actual use by Sanford and his tenants, and are charged with the facts inquiry would reveal. But, and this is closer to the point, Kern had actual notice of Sanford's claim. Burford told him of it, and Sanford told him of it before he bought. Under such circumstances, the running of the statute of limitations flowed on in an even, uninterrupted current. Under the facts of this record, it would run against English had he lived and sued after 14 years, and, a fortiori, would it run against Mrs. Baldwin and those claiming under her. We hold the 10 years ripened Sanford's right to an easement and that it became vested in him.

The premises considered, the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded, with directions to enter one establishing plaintiff's easement in the strip of land described in the petition, and decreeing that defendant remove his obstructions out of the way. The case-made is not directed to the proof of any amount of damages. The judgment, therefore, should be entered for nominal damages of one cent and costs. All concur.

RUTTER et al. v. CAROTHERS et al.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 1.
Nov. 27, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 171*)—CHANGE OF THEORY ON APPEAL.

Where the action, being to quiet title, was necessarily based upon an adverse claim by defendants, and the petition alleged plaintiffs' ouster and defendants' hostile possession, plaintiffs are estopped from contending, on appeal, that the purchase of the land by defendants at foreclosure sale prima facie inured to plaintiffs' benefit as tenants in common with defendants, because the agreed statement of facts did not expressly negative such tenancy by asserting an adverse holding.

2. STIPULATIONS (§ 14*)—CONSTRUCTION.

The pleadings and the trial theory of the action are necessarily a part of the agreed statement of facts, and should be considered in construing it.

5. QUIETING TITLE (§ 29*) — DEFENSES — LACHES.

In an action to quiet title brought September 4, 1904, by the children of the ancestor's child by his first wife against his second wife and his children by her to recover a third interest in land, it appeared that the ancestor died before plaintiffs' mother, leaving land subject to mortgage; that the land was purchased by one of defendants May 12, 1898, upon foreclosure; and that plaintiffs' mother died, a married woman, July 26, 1898, leaving plaintiffs as her only heirs. Held, that the facts showed no element of equitable laches so as to bar the action.

6. STATUTES (§ 181*)—CONSTRUCTION—LEGISLATIVE INTENDMENT—CONSEQUENCES.

The letter of the statute must give way somewhat to its obvious intendment, and it should not be construed so as to unnecessarily cause unreasonable results or impute injustice to the Legislature.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 263; Dec. Dig. § 181.*]

7. STATUTES (§ 225*)—CONSTRUCTION—RELATED STATUTES.

All statutes related to the same subject-matter should be construed together, if possible, so as not to render any provision of the law meaningless or repugnant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 303; Dec. Dig. § 225.*]

8. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 5*)—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES.

Statutes of limitation, being enacted to protect litigants from the infirmities of memory as well as to end litigation, are based upon sound public policy, and should be construed so as to effectuate the legislative intent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 13; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

9. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 78*)—TACKING DISABILITIES.

Tacking or cumulating disabilities under the statutes of limitations is not allowable.

10. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 73*)—ACTIONS FOR REAL ESTATE—TIME OF RUNNING—DISABILITIES—REMOVAL.

Rev. St. 1899, § 4262 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2335), provides that no action to recover land shall be maintained unless plaintiff or his ancestor was possessed thereof within 10 years before the commencement of the action. Section 4263 provides that an action must be commenced within one year after making entry, and within ten years from the time the right of entry descended or accrued. Section 4265 provides that the time during which a disability continues is not deemed any part of the time limited, and the action may be brought within three years after such disability is removed, provided it shall not be maintained after 24 years after its accrual, and section 4267 provides that, if one die during the continuance of such disability without any judgment on the cause of action, his heir additional time in certain contingencies, so that the heirs of a married woman to whom an action to recover land accrued May 12, 1898, could bring the action within 10 years thereafter, and were not bound to bring it within 3 years after her death, which occurred on July 26, 1898.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Shelby County; Nat M. Shelton, Judge.

Action by Retta Rutter and others against John H. Carothers and others. From an order granting a new trial, after judgment for plaintiffs, they appeal. Reversed and remanded, with directions to overrule motion for new trial and reinstate judgment.

Dysart & Mitchell and H. A. Wright, for appellants. V. L. Drain, for respondents.

LAMM, P. J. In a suit under section 650 to declare and establish title in 176 acres of land in Shelby county, judgment went for plaintiffs for an undivided one-third interest, subject to a charge of $383 in favor of defendants. Afterwards a new trial was awarded on defendants' motion. From that order plaintiffs appeal.

Summarized, the petition charges, and the agreed statement of facts shows, that James H. Carothers was twice married. His first wife died. By her he had one child, Alvira. Alvira married Chatman Speight, and died leaving children, married and unmarried, minors and adults, who, with their father, Chatman Speight, are parties plaintiff. By his second wife, Millie G., he had two sons, John F. and James A., who, with Millie G., are parties defendant. On an undisclosed day in 1892 James H. Carothers died seised of the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ and the E. 16 acres off of the E. $\frac{1}{2}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ in section 36, township 58, range 12, in Shelby county—all in possession of defendants. It is charged in the petition that defendants claim title, to the exclusion of plaintiffs, and are seeking to exclude and bar plaintiffs from any right or interest in the land; that defendants' claim of exclusive title is based upon a purchase made by the defendant John F. Carothers at a trust deed sale under a defaulted trust deed executed by his parents, James H. and Millie G.; that, if such is the basis of defendants' claim, it is not valid, for that the children of Alvira are entitled by inheritance and descent to a one-third undivided interest in the real estate, and that the purchase by John F. at foreclosure sale inured to the benefit of all the heirs of James H. Carothers as tenants in common. The prayer of the petition was that the court declare and quiet the title as between plaintiffs and defendants, and ascertain and determine ants and each of them, or to be forever barred from claiming any right, title, or interest in the part adjudged to plaintiffs; that the cloud upon their title be removed, and "for such other relief as they may appear to be entitled to in the premises." The answer of Millie G. admits her marriage with James H., that she is his widow, and that he died seised of the land described, and charges that Alvira, the mother of plaintiffs, died in July, 1898; further, that plaintiffs have no right to maintain this action because of section 4267 of the statute of limitations (Rev. St. 1890 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 2342]). As a further defense, she pleads generally that plaintiffs have been guilty of such laches as prevent a recovery. Defendants John F. and James A. file a joint answer, admitting that James H. Carothers died seised of the land, but they deny plaintiffs have any interest or rightful claim in the premises, in that they say James H. and Millie, his wife, executed a deed of trust on the land securing to the Jarvis-Conkling Trust Company borrowed money, which trust deed was spread of record; that, after the death of James H., the note evidencing said borrowed money and so secured was assigned to one Whitby; that on May 12, 1898, said deed of trust was duly foreclosed; that John F. Carothers purchased at said foreclosure sale for \$1,400.50 and received a trustee's deed on the payment of said sum; that John F. afterwards conveyed an interest in the land to James A.; that the right, if any, of plaintiffs to bring this action, terminated in three years after the death of their mother in the month of July, 1898. Wherefore they plead the three-year statute of limitations, to wit, section 4267, Rev. St. 1890, as a defense, and that plaintiffs have been guilty of laches abating the suit. The trial was to the court as in equity, and (as said) was upon an agreed statement of facts. In addition to the facts admitted, already set forth, it stipulated that rent offset betterments; that, if the court ruled against defendants on law questions tendered by their answer, then a decree might go adjudging one-third of the land in controversy to plaintiffs, subject, however, to a charge of \$383 to be paid defendants by them (i. e., one-third of a mortgage debt presently explained), nothing in such stipulation to preclude either party from appeal. It was further agreed that James H. Carothers died seised of the real estate in controversy subject to a recorded mortgage (viz., said deed of trust) given by himself and wife to secure a note therein described, which mortgage was foreclosed on the 12th of May, 1898; that at such foreclosure sale John F., one of the defendants, purchased the land; that afterwards John F. conveyed an undivided one-half interest to James A., his brother and codefendant; were the only children of James H. Carothers; that Alvira died July 26, 1898, leaving the plaintiffs as her only heirs; that the foreclosure was not made until nine months after the death of James H.; that the present suit was filed September 2, 1904; that Alvira was at the time of the foreclosure and up to her death a married woman; that certain of her children are minors, who sue by their next friend; that the trustee's deed to John F. is dated May 12, 1898, and is duly of record, and that the purchase price was \$1,400.50. It was further stipulated that by a proper proceeding in the probate court of Shelby county the personal estate of James H. Carothers was found to be the absolute property of the widow, and that administration was dispensed with. Such is a summary of the record.

1. Assuming, as a postulate, that, as a general rule, tenants in common bear a confidential relation to each other, that the possession of one is the possession of the others, and that the protection of the common title by one co-tenant in the payment of taxes or other liens or a purchase at execution or foreclosure sale, on the one hand, creates a common burden on all the tenants in common, and, on the other hand, creates a common benefit to be shared by all, and, assuming that such purchase as a general rule is presumed to be for the benefit of all (Hinters v. Hinters, 114 Mo. 26, 21 S. W. 456; Cockrill v. Hutchinson, 135 Mo. 67, 36 S. W. 375, 58 Am. St. Rep. 564), it is argued by plaintiffs' counsel that, since the agreed statement of facts does not in terms assert an adverse holding or claim on the part of defendants as against plaintiffs, therefore there arises a prima facie presumption that said purchase of John F. Carothers inured to all the heirs of James H. Carothers, and (they say) the judgment rendered in the first instance in favor of plaintiffs can well stand on that proposition if on no other. But, under the facts of this record, we deem that contention unsound. Plaintiffs are estopped to take that position; for it runs counter to the very theory upon which they bottomed their case, and on which they invoked the aid of the law. Observe there were no grounds upon which an action to quiet title would lie unless there was an adverse claim asserted by defendants. Accordingly the petition alleges plaintiffs' ouster by defendants, and the suit proceeds on the theory of an adverse claim and hostile possession by them. So the answers are in the nature of a confession and avoidance, viz., admitting the original co-tenancy, but alleging the exclusion of plaintiffs from possession and from title and interest under a hostile claim predicated of a purchase at the foreclosure sale. On that theory the case was brought and tried, and it will not do to must be read into and illuminate the words of the stipulation. To rule otherwise would be the same as to allow A. to recover a judgment against B. on one theory, and, when the judgment is challenged and set aside, allow A. to re-establish the judgment on a different theory and one outside of the pleadings, which in this case would be the theory that there was no occasion for any suit to quiet title, and no use of any judgment at all in that behalf. As it is an unbending rule of appellate practice that a cause must proceed above on the same theory it was tried below, and that a judgment is the conclusion of the law on the pleadings and facts, the point is ruled against plaintiffs.

2. It is argued here that plaintiffs were guilty of such laches as bar recovery. Attending to that contention, it will be observed that, though the answers plead laches as a defense, yet laches is not admitted by the pleadings, and there are no facts in the agreed statement relating to laches and on which to predicate such defense. Laches gives rise to an equitable doctrine, free from artificial or fixed rules, having regard to the relations of the parties to each other and to the subject-matter to be applied to each case in accordance with its own particular circumstances in order to reach substantial justice—for instance, where plaintiff lies by an unreasonable length of time awaiting a rise in land or some future event to determine his course, or where by acquiescence or by sleeping upon his rights he creates the belief in others that those rights are abandoned whereby he influences them to act on such belief, or where something has intervened whereby the party asking relief would obtain an unconscionable advantage if the relief were given. Under these or like conditions, where there is some natural justice behind the claim, the defense of laches is allowed independently of the statute of limitations. Cockrill v. Hutchinson, 135 Mo., loc. cit. 75 et seq., 36 S. W. 375, 58 Am. St. Rep. 504; Stevenson v. Smith, 189 Mo., loc. cit. 447 et seq., 88 S. W. 86; Landrum v. Bank, 63 Mo., loc. cit. 56 et seq.; Bucher v. Hohl, 199 Mo., loc. cit. 330, 97 S. W. 922, 116 Am. St. Rep. 492. The case at bar being barren of essential facts upon which to predicate the defense of staleness or laches, the point is ruled against defendants. With the foregoing subsidiary questions at rest, we confront the main proposition in the case.

3. The foreclosure was on May 12, 1898, and the trustee's deed bears date that day. Alvira died on the 26th day of the following July. Suit was brought by her children on September 2, 1904—that is, more than three years after her death, but within ten years of the time a cause of action accrued until her death on July 26, 1898; that (she being then under disability) her heirs, under Rev. St. 1899, § 4267, had three years after her death, and no more, to sue and establish their rights in the property. Learned counsel for plaintiffs contend, contra, that the statute of limitations would not run for ten years after May 12, 1898, and that the three-year provision of the statute must be construed so that it will not impinge upon nor destroy the ten-year provision, which latter, they say, is a general rule of statutory law relating to limitations on real actions. A solution of the problem thus presented calls for a construction of certain sections of our statute of limitations relating to real actions, viz., sections 4262, 4265, 4267, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 2335, 2338, and 2342). The general language employed in these sections creates obscurity, and sometimes makes their construction exceedingly troublesome when the courts are called upon to apply them to a given case. The trouble is accentuated not a little by the use of unhappy expressions on the part of the lawmaker. We have come to the conclusion that the contention of defendants' counsel is unsound, and that an equitable construction of the statute (by which we mean an interpretation of the written law in accordance with its spirit and true intentment) sustains the position of plaintiffs' counsel. This because:

(a) Conceding that courts may not enlarge the written law by additions or diminish it by writing exceptions into the law obviously absent from the legislative mind, conceding, moreover, that the law must be obeyed notwithstanding the apparent rigor and hardship of its application (ita lex scripta est), conceding withal that, if the intent of the lawmaker is plain and single, then courts are relieved from the burden of finding a reason for the law (stat pro ratione voluntas); yet the practical administration of the law through the courts would quite miss refined and elevated justice in many instances if the naked and cold words of the statute were not warmed into life and good sense by seeking, finding, and reading into the law its true spirit and intentment. Not only so, but obviously this delicate and high judicial task is not to be put to one side because it may be one difficult of performance; for in law, as in life, the more difficult the task imposed by duty, the more occasion for caution and pains. "The construction of all statutes of this state," says the lawmaker (Rev. St. 1899, § 4160 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 2252]), "shall be by the following additional rules, unless such construction be plainly repugnant to the intent of the Legislature or of the context of the same statute" (here follow certain rules). Referring to the exceptions just mentioned, the Legislature in a prior section (4159) again points to the judicial duty and power of construing statutes by certain fixed rules, "unless there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction." That rule of interpretation, as has been often said in the venerable language of great judges, is but the application of the divine injunction that the letter killeth while the spirit maketh alive. Accordingly, from the Year Books to this year of grace, those are recognized canons of construction which ordain that the naked letter of the law must gently and a little give way to its obvious intentment; that those who interpret the laws must not impute injustice to the lawmaker by so interpreting his language as to unnecessarily produce harsh and unreasonable results, or impute to him a disposition callous to natural justice. We must say other rules of interpretation construe all statutes relating to the same subject-matter in pari materia, throw the light of the context upon the passage to be interpreted, and so rule, if possible, that other provisions of the law are not destroyed or made meaningless, or repugnant, thus marring the symmetry of the whole body of the enactment. Perry v. Strawbridge, 209 Mo., loc. cit. 636 et seq., 108 S. W. 641, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 244, 123 Am. St. Rep. 510; Keeney v. McVoy, 206 Mo., loc. cit. 64 et seq., 103 S. W. 946. It may not be amiss to remind ourselves of a general proposition applicable to statutes of limitations. It has been said that such statutes are as beneficial as any to be found in the books; that they rest upon sound public policy and tend to the peace and welfare of society; that they are construed so as to effectuate the intention of the Legislature, although they in individual cases may produce hardship. While one obvious purpose to be subserved is repose, yet the philosophy of these statutes connects itself with the infirmities of human memory. Accordingly, it has been well said that: "If parties will not settle their business matters within reasonable periods before human testimony is lost and human memory fail, on pain of losing the right to a remedy thereon, not the law, but the party, is responsible for the hardship entailed." Wood on Limitations (3d Ed.) § 4.

Giving effect to the foregoing general observations by holding in mind the rules of interpretation set forth, a scholar in statutory law or in general jurisprudence would not expect to find in the statute of limitations a rule of written law dealing with a person under the disability of infancy or other disability, or the heirs of those under such disability, more harshly than it dealt with others not so handicapped. Conceding that such scholar would approach his investigation charged with knowledge that the policy of the law does not allow the cumulating or tacking of disabilities, yet he would be astonished to find that a Legislature had given to a person not under disability 10 years to bring his real action, and, if he die within the 10 years, the same law gave his heirs what was left of the 10-year term to sue, and that the same Legislature had granted to a person under disability the grace of 24 years in which to sue if the disability continue so long, or 3 years after the disability was removed, if removed after 10 years and within the 24; and then had faced about, and had said to the mother or infant child under disability: If you are so unfortunate as to die presently after your cause of action had accrued, say, in a day, a month or a year, your heirs (themselves peradventure under disability) shall have only three years plus the day, the month, or year you lived after your cause of action accrued. What is this but supplementing the terrors of death with a heavy burden at the hands of the law—a burden not laid on the shoulders of others more fortunate? Yet to that complexion we must come if we adopt the theory of defendants' counsel. If Alvira had been a man or unmarried (i. e. sui juris), she, and her heirs in case of her death, would have 10 years in which to sue after her cause of action accrued. But, being a woman and married, her heirs (some of them minors), it is contended, have only three years after her death in which to sue, which added to the days between May 12 and July 26, 1893, make the total term of limitations allowed in the case at bar 3 years, 2 months, and 14 days, instead of 10 years. A bare statement of the proposition shows the harsh inequality in such interpretation of the statute—a discrimination, too, against a class of persons the law holds in tender regard. It seems to me a court would be justified in hesitating and doubting much, and looking long and well to the reason and words of the law, before reaching that conclusion.

(b) Fortunately such conclusion is not a necessary one as will presently be seen. Section 4262 reads: "No action for the recovery of any lands, tenements or hereditaments, or for the recovery of the possession thereof, shall be commenced, had or maintained by any person, whether citizen, denizen, alien, resident or non-resident of this state, unless it appear that the plaintiff, his ancestor, predecessor, grantor or other person under whom he claims was seized or possessed of the premises in question within ten years before the commencement of such action." Contemplating an entry upon land in certain contingencies, the next section provided for commencing an action after entry, and directs that an action must be commenced within one year after making such entry, "and within ten years from the time the right to make such entry descended or accrued." Section 4263 reads: "If any person entitled to commence any action in this article specified or to make any entry be, at the time such right or title shall first descend or accrue, either within the age of twenty-one years, or insane, or imprisoned on any criminal charge or in execution upon some conviction of a criminal offense for any time less than life, or a married woman, the time during which such disability shall continue shall not be deemed any portion of the time in this article limited for the commencement of such action or the making such entry; but such person may bring such action or make such entry after the time so limited, and within three years after such disability is removed: Provided, that no such action shall be commenced, had or maintained or entry made by any person laboring under the disabilities specified in this section, after twenty-four years after the cause of such action or right of entry shall have accrued." Section 4267 (the one relied upon by defendants) reads: "If any person entitled to commence such action or to make such entry die during the continuance of any disability specified in section 4265, and no determination or judgment be had of the title, right or action to him accrued, his heirs, or any person claiming from, by or under him, may commence such action or make such entry after the time in this article limited for that purpose, and within three years after his death, but not after that period." Obviously section 4262 gives to all persons sui juris or non sui juris, under disability or not, whether ancestor or heir, a main right, viz., 10 years in which to institute suit for the recovery of land or for the recovery of the possession thereof, said 10 years commencing with the accruing of a cause of action. That section and the ensuing sections (with some modifications immaterial here) have been the statute law of this state for three-fourths of a century. Without any legislative direction to that effect that section and those following it would be construed together as relating to the same subject-matter, and so dove-tailed together by interpretation as to make a symmetrical code. But we see the Legislature itself intended they should be construed together. They refer to each other in words. They are all found in article 1, c. 48, Rev. St. 1899. Section 4265 is plainly intended as a benefit to those under disability. It is a shield, not a sword. It does not shorten the 10-year rule prescribed in section 4262, but adds something of value by tolling the statute in the interest of those under disability by ordaining that the time such disability shall continue "shall not be deemed any portion of the time in this article limited for the commencement of such action." The "time in this article limited" is 10 years, and section 4265 ordains that a person under the specified disability may bring his action "after the time so limited, and within three years after such disability is removed." We think it obvious that section 4265 assumes that persons under disability have the 10 years at all events and under any circumstances, but also have an additional time in certain emergencies and contingencies. If we did not construe the phrase, "after the time so limited and within three years after such disability is removed," as perpetuating in any event the 10-year statute, we would have an absurd and unjust result easily put. For instance, if A., a married woman, has a right of action accruing to her on Monday, and if on Tuesday she become discover, she would have only three years and one day in which to sue, for her disability was removed on Tuesday, and some of the words of section 4265 seem to require her to sue in three years after that event. But this interpretation "corrodes the bowels" of the text, and therefore is vicious in taking no note of the words "after the time so limited," which evidently refer to section 4262 giving to her and every one else the general, plain, unlimited right to sue within 10 years. When we come to section 4267, we find the same phraseology connecting that section with "the time in this article limited for that purpose." While the language used lacks precision and the law is so unhandsomely written as to breed doubts and obscurities, as said, yet, if we read the 10-year rule into sections 4265 and 4267 to the extent that it is to be preserved as a general statute of limitations with (in named contingencies) certain extensions and benefits to those under disability, we think in that way some of the obscurities will be better resolved than in any other.

(c) The foregoing conclusion lies well with the trend of the judicial mind. In Gray v. Yates, 67 Mo. 601, this court announced that: "If the disability has existed for a period of time less than 10 years, the person laboring under such disability must institute his suit within three years after the removal of the disability, unless said three years, together with the period of the disability, are less than 10 years, in which event such person is entitled to the unexpired portion of the 10 years; for all persons are entitled to 10 years in any event. When a party has the 3 years given by the fourth section, and the whole period of the 10 years given by the first section, the right of action or of entry is barred. In other words, when 10 years have elapsed since the right of action accrued, and 3 of those years have been free from disability, the right of entry is barred. A like construction has been given to a similar statute in New York in the following cases: Smith v. Burtis, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 180; Jackson v. Johnson, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 93, 94, 15 Am. Dec. 433; Wilson v. Betts, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 208, 209." The Gray Case seems never to have been overruled or criticised, but, contra, has been frequently cited with approval. De Hatre v. Edmonds, 200 Mo. 246, 98 S. W. 744, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 86, was a troublesome case, and the different provisions of the statute of limitations on real actions were held under review. The exposition there given of those provisions was cautious, painstaking, and full. Our learned Brother Graves, speak-

Allison, 192 Mo. 366, 91 S. W. 115, quotes liberally from that case, but differentiates and discriminates. Referring to its exposition of section 4267, he said: "Of course, if the limit of 3 years named in this section added to the time already run from the date of the accrual of the right to sue would make the time less than the 10 years named in section 4262, the party would have the full 10 years given by that section, but no more. On the other hand, if the 3 years served to extend the 10 years, the party entitled to sue would have the full benefit of the 3 years, but no more." In the Robinson Case, supra, and in Reed v. Painter, 145 Mo. 354, 46 S. W. 1089, there are remarks, somewhat obiter, we think, and by way of argument, seemingly running counter to the doctrine announced in the Gray and the De Hatre Cases. But it would seem those remarks were not necessary; for, as we read those cases, in both of them the integrity of the 10-year rule of limitations was preserved.

The premises considered, we conclude the judgment entered below on the pleadings and agreed statement of facts was right. Hence it was error to grant a new trial. Accordingly the order granting one is reversed and the cause is remanded, with directions to overrule that motion and reinstate the original judgment in favor of plaintiffs. All concur.

STATE v. PAYNE.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 2.
Nov. 23, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 206*)—PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION—STATUTES—RETROACTIVE OPERATION.

Since the act securing the right of a preliminary examination did not become effective until July 14, 1907, accused was not entitled to a preliminary examination in a prosecution for larceny under an information filed April 1, 1907.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 206.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1167*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—RULINGS ON INFORMATION.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 2522 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1503), providing that, if two indictments for the same offense be pending against an accused at the same time, the indictment first found shall be deemed suspended and shall be quashed, and that the first information was not formally quashed on the record when the amended information was filed, is not available as a ground for reversal on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3100-3106; Dec. Dig. § 1167.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1202*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY—FORMER CONVICTIONS.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 2379 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1461), imposing an additional punishment upon one who has previously been convicted for an offense punishable by imprisonment in the state penitentiary and discharged, upon his subsequent conviction, in a larceny prosecution the state could plead accused's former conviction for grand larceny and imprisonment in, and discharge from, the state penitentiary, and could education and the penitentiary records showing service of the sentence imposed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3261; Dec. Dig. 1202.*]

4. WITNESSES (§ 359*)—IMPEACHMENT—FORMER CONVICTION.

In a larceny prosecution, the court records, showing accused's former conviction for larceny, and the state penitentiary records, showing her service of sentence and discharge, were competent to impeach accused's testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1161; Dec. Dig. § 359.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1204*)—EVIDENCE—IDENTITY.

In a larceny prosecution, in which the information charged an aggravated offense under the habitual criminal statute (Rev. St. 1899, § 2379 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 1461]), the state penitentiary records were admissible to identify accused as the person who had served sentence in the penitentiary under the former conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1204.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1172*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS—PREJUDICIAL EFFECT.

In a larceny prosecution, under an information containing a count under the habitual criminal statute (Rev. St. 1899, § 2379 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 1461]), error in an instruction submitting the case on that count for not requiring a finding that the larceny was committed in the county of the venue did not prejudice accused, where she was not convicted under the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3154-3169; Dec. Dig. § 1172.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 741*)—PROVINCE OF COURT AND JURY—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

Where the evidence tended to prove every material fact necessary to conviction, requested instructions in the nature of demurrers to the evidence were properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1705-1728; Dec. Dig. § 741.*]

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 829*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS—CHARGES ALREADY GIVEN.

Requested charges, which were covered by charges given by the court, were properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. § 829.*]

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1137*)—APPEAL—ESTOPPEL TO ALLEGE ERROR—INVITED ERROR.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 2535 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1509), providing that the judgment shall not be affected by any error committed at the instance of defendant, accused cannot complain on appeal of a charge given for her.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3007-3010; Dec. Dig. § 1137.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pettis County; Louis Hoffmann, Judge.

Susie Payne was convicted of larceny, and she appeals. Affirmed.

C. C. Kelly, for appellant. E. W. Major, Atty. Gen., and Chas. G. Revelle, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

GANTT, P. J. This prosecution was commenced by an information filed by the prosecuting attorney of Pettis county, charging the defendant with larceny from the person of Homer Arnold in the nighttime. Afterwards, on April 1, 1907, an amended information was filed charging the defendant with the same offense, with the addition of a charge of a former conviction of the same offense, and that she had been imprisoned in the penitentiary, and, having fully complied with the sentence, had been discharged therefrom. After unavailing motions to quash and strike out certain portions of the information, the defendant was duly arraigned and entered her plea of not guilty. She was put upon her trial before a jury duly impeached and sworn and found guilty of larceny from the person in the nighttime, as charged in the information, and her punishment assessed at five years in the penitentiary. Motions for new trial and in arrest of judgment were duly filed and overruled, and the defendant sentenced in accord with the verdict, and an appeal was granted to this court.

The testimony on the part of the state tended to establish the truth of the charge of larceny from the person of Homer Arnold in the city of Sedalia on or about January 5, 1907, by the defendant placing her hand in his left-hand trousers pocket, abstracting $2 and some additional change therefrom and then running away. This occurred about 9 o'clock in the night of that day. The records of the circuit court of Pettis county were also introduced in evidence showing a former conviction of the defendant on the charge of grand larceny, and the record of the penitentiary showed that she had complied with the judgment and sentence and had been discharged therefrom. There was evidence on the part of the defendant tending to show that Arnold did not have the money, and on the part of the defendant herself denying that she took from him the sum of $2, or any other amount, but that he gave her 50 cents. The defendant is not represented in this court by counsel, and we are driven to an examination of the record and to her motions for new trial and in arrest to discover whether any reversible errors were committed against her.

1. The information is in the usual and often approved form, and is entirely sufficient. The objection to the information on the ground that defendant had not been accorded a preliminary examination was without merit for the reason that the act securing that privilege to defendant did not go into effect until July 14, 1907. Equally unavailing is the point that the first information was not formally quashed on the record when the amended information was filed. Section 2522, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1503); State v. Williams, 191 Mo., loc. cit.

212, 90 S. W. 448. Unquestionably the state had the right to plead the former conviction as substantive fact constituting an aggravated offense under section 2379, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1461), and by the same token the right to prove it by the record. State v. Manicke, 139 Mo. 545, 41 S. W. 223; State v. Vaughan, 199 Mo. 111, 97 S. W. 879. This evidence was likewise competent to impeach the defendant's testimony and to establish her identity as the party who had served her sentence in the penitentiary.

2. The first instruction given for the state was defective in not requiring the jury to find that the larceny was committed in Pettis county; but, as defendant was not convicted under section 2379, Rev. St. 1899, it could not possibly have prejudiced her rights. State v. Waters, 144 Mo. 841, 46 S. W. 173.

3. Instruction No. 2 given by the court properly defined the offense of which the defendant was convicted. It required the jury to find all the elements and facts essential to the crime. Instructions 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 are such as are usually given in criminal prosecutions, and are in accordance with long approved precedents. Instructions 1 and 2 requested by the defendant and refused by the court were in the nature of demurrers, and were properly denied, as the evidence tended to prove every material fact necessary to the conviction. The court gave instructions numbered 3, 4, and 7, wherein the jury were instructed that the information was a mere formal accusation and no evidence of guilt, and on the presumption of innocence, and an instruction to the jury on the credibility of the witnesses in addition to that which the court had already given of its own motion. Instructions 5 and 6 prayed by the defendant were properly refused, as the law involved therein had been correctly declared by the court to the jury in other instructions. As to instruction No. 8, the record discloses that this was given at the instance of the defendant, and she therefore cannot complain. Section 2535, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1509); State v. Palmer, 161 Mo., loc. cit. 175, 61 S. W. 651; State v. Summar, 143 Mo. 230, 45 S. W. 254.

4. The exception based upon the remarks of the prosecuting attorney, we think, is without any substantial merit and in our opinion furnishes no ground whatever for the reversal of this judgment.

We have been unable to find any error, which in the least tends to the prejudice of the defendant's substantial rights.

Accordingly, the judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Stoddard County; J. L. Fort, Judge.

Action by C. P. Seilert against William F. McAnally, J. W. White, as guardian, etc., of John and Curtis McAnally, and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant White, as guardian, etc., appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Houck & Houck, for appellant. Ralph Wammack, for respondent.

LAMM, P. J. Plaintiff sues in equity to set aside two certain deeds to Stoddard county land, as a cloud on his title, and to vest title out of defendants and into him. Defendant William F. McAnally does not appeal. A decree going, the defendant guardian and curator appeals.

Summarized, the bill alleges: That on the 23d day of July, 1897, said Wm. F. was seised in fee of the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ and the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$, section 25, township 26, range 10 (80 acres). That on said day he and his then wife, Martha Isabell, conveyed the land to one Alex. McAnally for an alleged consideration of \$1,500; the deed put of record presently. That three days later Alex. reconveyed the land to Martha Isabell for a like alleged consideration, which deed was put of record on the same day as the other. That on the 16th of September, 1899, over two years later, Wm. F. and his then wife, Alice (Martha Isabell having died intestate), sold the land to plaintiff, conveying it by warranty deed for full value paid, putting plaintiff in possession. That being unlettered, unfamiliar with land titles, or how to trace them, plaintiff had to depend on others. That he intended to buy an unincumbered fee-simple title, and to that end used reasonable diligence and caution by requiring said McAnally to furnish him an abstract of title. That such abstract was furnished showing perfect fee-simple title in him. That relying on and induced by said abstract, and by the fraudulent representation of Wm. F., viz., that he had a fee-simple title, plaintiff purchased the land, paid his money, and took a conveyance and possession. That in truth and fact the title was defective not only in respect to said two conveyances, but in respect to other matters (immaterial here). That later, to wit, in January, 1905, Wm. F. McAnally notified plaintiff that he did not own the land at the time he conveyed to plaintiff, but had theretofore conveyed to Martha Isabell, and that "they had better fix up the title * * * while they were both alive." That plaintiff then caused the records to be searched and found the two 1897 deeds. That said abstract of title failed to show either of them. That "said deeds were falsely and fraudulently executed by the parties thereto with intent to cheat and defraud prior and subsequent creditors and probable purchasers of said land. That they were voluntary conveyances and were made without any consideration, and no change of possession was ever had thereunder." That the heirs of Martha Isabell are William F., her husband, and John and Curtis, her minor children. That defendant White is the duly appointed, qualified, and acting guardian and curator of said minors. That, though often requested to do so, defendants "have failed and neglected to perfect his title to said land." And that said deeds "constitute a cloud on plaintiff's title." Wherefore, etc. The answer was a general denial by the guardian and curator in his own behalf and for said minors. Defendant McAnally defaulted.

Plaintiff, to sustain the averments of his bill, put in proof as follows: (1) A warranty deed to him from W. F. and Alice, his second wife, of date September 16, 1899; consideration, $800. (2) A warranty deed in regular form by W. F. and Martha Isabell, his first wife, to Alexander McAnally; consideration, date, and record as alleged in the petition. (3) A warranty deed from Alexander to Martha Isabell and recorded the same day as No. 2. Supplementing his documentary proof, plaintiff took the stand and testified that he bought the land on the 16th day of September, 1899, now lives on it as a home, knew McAnally for some time, always considered him a man of his word and honorable, and knew he had lived on it several years and had rented it out, collecting the rent when not living on it. McAnally came to him and offered to sell. Told McAnally he might trade if he had a good title. McAnally said he had a good, straight title—"not a flaw in it." Plaintiff said to him he "was ignorant and did not know a thing about land titles." McAnally replied he would fix that matter by getting an abstract. Plaintiff told him to do so. He would have it examined and would take the land if the title was all right. McAnally got an abstract showing the title all right. (Note: This abstract omitted the 1897 deeds and certified the title clear.) Thereupon the deed was made, and plaintiff paid $800. Plaintiff firmly believed at the time that McAnally had a good title; would not have traded if he had doubted it. Plaintiff knew nothing about McAnally's deed to Alexander and Alexander's to Martha Isabell, and never heard of them till years afterwards. McAnally was reputed to be the owner of the land—had paid taxes, lived on it, or rented it just like an owner. Plaintiff bought the place for a home, and since purchasing had built a barn and fences and had otherwise improved the place, never having been disturbed in his possession or enjoyment of it. In 1905 plaintiff got a letter from McAnally telling him that he had deeded the land to his first wife before she died. Put on inquiry, plaintiff then searched the record and found deeds putting title in Martha Isabell. He then went to Alexander McAnally (Wm. F.'s father, now dead), and on inquiry was told that he (Alexander) paid nothing for his deed, and got nothing on Martha Isabell's. Plaintiff had no schooling, could neither read nor write. The land in question is all he has. William F. McAnally told plaintiff he conveyed to Isabell to keep Mr. Houck, an attorney, from enforcing the collection of some machine notes he held against him and one Miller, and that there was no consideration for the conveyance. On cross-examination plaintiff admitted that neither William F. or Martha Isabell was ever indebted to him in aught, and that he had had no dealings with Wm. F. except as detailed in his direct examination.

To further sustain his bill, plaintiff offered the deposition of defendant, William F. McAnally. In substance, his testimony follows: Witness sold the land to C. P. Seilert; bought it from one Hunt; owned it seven or eight years; used his own money in paying for it; his first wife, Martha Isabell, resided on the land; witness was living on it when he sold it to Seilert. Asked under what circumstances the conveyances were made to Alexander and Martha Isabell, he answered that he owed a debt to a machine company for a binder bought by him and one Miller; they giving joint notes. These came into the hands of Mr. Houck for collection. Witness was about to sell the place he was then on and move on the land in controversy, so he sold his interest in the machine to Miller, who was to take up the notes. Afterwards Houck wrote witness that he held a note overdue. Witness told Houck Miller was to pay—he must look to him. Houck promised to look to Miller. Witness then went to Dunklin county. While there, Houck wrote him threatening to sue if the note was not paid and to sell the land. The letter said it could not be held any longer as a home-stead. At that time Martha Isabell was in bad health and nervous. She insisted witness should transfer the land to her to save it from being sold. Witness consented to do it. A deed was made and acknowledged, and his wife came to Stoddard county and had "the changes made." No money passed from witness' father, Alexander, to him, or from Martha Isabell to Alexander. The only object of the transfer was to keep the property from being sold for the machine debt. Witness was allowed to say that it was not intended that the title was to pass for her use and benefit, but (quoting) "she was just to hold it for me." Nothing was ever said, however, about her deeding it back. The possession never passed out of witness under the deeds in question; but, when those deeds were made, witness and his wife were not living on the land. Witness collected the rent after the conveyances. Martha Isabell, after the deed to her (quoting), "made no claim of ownership to these lands." They were always assessed in witness' name, and the rent notes ran that way. Martha Isabell died about six weeks after she got title. Witness narrated at length how Martha Isabell got $200 as a present from her father, which he (witness) put into a piece of land and took title to himself. Sale was made, and the purchase money used to buy other land; witness taking title. This was about 13 years before he bought the Hunt land. His wife made no claim to any interest in any of the lands, and witness could not say he used his wife's money in buying the Hunt land. The conveyance to her was not on account of the advancement made by her father about 21 years ago. Witness had four children by his first wife; two now living, John and Curtis. One died after Martha Isabell. He stated his reason for not telling Mr. Sellert that he had conveyed the property to his wife to be that he had "no notice of this other conveyance, except what my wife had told me." Witness said he did not know the deeds were recorded. He knew about making one deed, but not the other, and, not knowing they were recorded, did not tell Sellert. He intended to convey him a clear title. His wife told him the deeds had been made and recorded, and that is what made him write Sellert that, if they were on record, he (witness) "wanted to fix it." Witness was "positive" there was an agreement between them that she take the land and hold it to prevent its sale for the machine debt. On cross-examination he stated that the $200 received by his wife from her father was put into land which was sold, and the proceeds reinvested in other land, and so on down until the Hunt land was bought. Witness and Martha Isabell lived together as husband and wife until she died. Never was sued on the machine note. Denied knowing that Miller had paid it before his wife got title to the land. Knew nothing in regard to it, except from Houck's letter, and the transfer was on its heels.

The guardian and curator, on behalf of his wards, introduced no testimony. Such is the case on the facts. At the close of plaintiff's testimony, an unsuccessful demurrer was interposed, and exception saved. The decree narrates: That the case was heard on the petition and on the "answer of J. W. White, as guardian and curator of John and Curtis McAnally, minor defendants"; that defendant William F. made default; that plaintiff and the guardian and curator came in person and by counsel. The issues were found for plaintiff. The assailed conveyances were found to be falsely and fraudulently executed by the parties thereto "with intent to cheat and defraud prior and subsequent creditors and probable purchasers of said land," voluntary, etc., and that no change of possession followed them. After other recitations relating to plaintiff's purchase in good faith on full consideration paid for a fee-simple title with no "actual knowledge" of said conveyances, etc., it was adjudged and decreed that the deeds (describing them) be canceled and held for naught, and that the legal title to the real estate (describing it) "be divested out of defendants and fully vested and confirmed in the plaintiff," and that plaintiff have his costs and execution therefor.

On such record, can the decree stand? Clearly not, because:

(a) The style of this case, the verbiage of pleadings, decree, and of the whole record, indicate that John and Curtis were neither sued nor summoned as parties defendant. Defendant William F. had parted with his title, whatever it was, to plaintiff, and had no interest left subject to a decree. That is, if he had a paramount title, he had conveyed it to Sellert with covenants of warranty. Likewise, if he was tenant by the curtesy, as widower, then his life estate, with the right to possession, passed by his said warranty deed. Moreover, it cropped out in evidence that he had four children by Martha Isabell, three of them alive at the time of her death. One died since. We assume one died before. Now, the petition does not count on the theory that W. F. inherited an undivided interest from the child dying after its mother, but on the theory that the mother had no title in equity. If William F. inherited an interest as one of the heirs of his deceased child, and if descent was cast on him before he made his deed to plaintiff, then that interest, whatever aliquot part it was, passed by his deed to plaintiff. If such was cast on him after he made that deed, then such after-acquired undivided interest inured to the benefit of plaintiff under his prior warranty. But there is nothing of this sort in the bill. Its theory is that the mother died seised of a legal title in the land; that such title descended to her children, John and Curtis; that her title was fraudulent. Hence the title of John and Curtis as privies in estate was tainted. Wherefore plaintiff sought to clear up his own title by removing the cloud of the minors' tainted title. In that view of the case, why Wm. F. was made a party is not clear to me.

It is primer law that the title to personal property of one dying intestate passed to his administrator. If he die testate, then to his executor or administrator cum testamento annexo. But the title to real estate vests directly in the heir. So, the title to personal property belonging to the ward (absent an express trust) is not vested in his guardian and curator, as a matter of law, but in the ward. Accordingly, the ward's title to either his real or personal estate cannot be disturbed without his being a party to the suit duly summoned and having his day in court. He cannot be sued and bound vicariously by haling into court his guardian and curator.

Rev. St. 1899, § 558 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 589); Webb v. Hayden, 166 Mo., loc. cit. 50, 65 S. W. 760; Judson v. Walker, 155 Mo., loc. cit. 179, 53 S. W. 1083; Payne v. Masek, 114 Mo., loc. cit. 636, 21 S. W. 751 (a case taking color from the peculiar wording of the partition act). Mr. White, as guardian and curator, had no title to the real estate of his wards. His duty was to defend their title when they were summoned by due process in a suit relating to it. It is not clear therefore to us why he was made a party defendant. These preliminary observations are made in order there may be no misconception about the proper parties defendant in a real estate action, or mischief rush in through the open door of a bad precedent. A judgment vesting the title of infant heirs out of them and into another (as does this), without their being sued and summoned, has no legal foot to stand on, and would be brushed away on appeal. However, there is bare chance that (present obscurities) we do not understand the record. It may be that under an unhappy title of the case, and despite unhappy record language, John and Curtis were actually summoned, and their guardian and curator answered for them. Extending grace to plaintiff by throwing that doubt in the scale, we shall dispose of the merits.

(b) Under this record the land in controversy was once the homestead of William F. and Martha Isabell. That status is presumed to continue until the contrary appears. The burden, then, was on the plaintiff to show it ceased to exist, and, until he successfully carried that burden, the McAnally title could not be fraudulently dealt with by them. Such has been the law in this state since Vogler v. Montgomery, 54 Mo. 577. The homestead is forbidden fruit to the creditor. He may not take it or eat thereof. Wherefore, as to the world at large, the homesteader (absent a statutory prohibition) may convey his homestead at his own sweet will, fraud or no fraud. This because, as said by Lord Halsbury, in Derry v. Peek, 14 App. Cas., loc. cit. 343, quoting language his lordship said was some centuries old: "Fraud without damage and damage without fraud" do not give rise to actions for fraud. There are exceptions to this rule, notably when parties deal with each other in a fiduciary relation; but the case at bar is not within any exception. There is no testimony that the McAnallys had abandoned their homestead in Stoddard. It is true they lived a little while in Dunklin; but nothing shows they intended to remain there permanently, or that the intention to return (the animus revertendi) did not exist. We find they came back presently. True, too, Mr. Houck wrote McAnally that he had lost his homestead. But may a decree stand on that letter? The learned attorney doubtless had the crowning virtues of a good lawyer, viz., diligence, tact, learning, integrity. Yet the aim of the letter was merely to press a spur into the side of a balking debtor, not to establish a proposition of law and fact. Observe, he did not pass on the issue of homestead or no homestead as a judge in a court of justice, or as an arbitrator or referee in a rustic tribunal, and decide the question, rusticum iudicium, so to speak. Ergo, his proclamation that the homestead was lost did not operate as an estoppel of record or in pais binding on all men, courts included. We conclude the judgment should be reversed on the ground (if no other) that there was no proof such as would vitiate the conveyances of the homestead. The fact that they were voluntary amounts to nothing; nor does the fact that Martha Isabell, during the six weeks she lived, took no possession, and that McAnally continued in possession up to the sale amount to anything. He was entitled to possession under his curtesy.

(c) Section 3399, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1933), in the chapter on Fraudulent Conveyances, reads: "No such conveyance or charge shall be deemed void, in favor of a subsequent purchaser, if the deed or conveyance shall have been duly acknowledged or proved and recorded, or the purchaser have actual notice thereof at the time of the payment of the purchase money, unless it shall appear that the grantee in such conveyance, or person to be benefited by such charge, was party or privy to the fraud intended." The foregoing section is also an insurmountable barrier to plaintiff's recovery. This because:

(1) The deeds sought to be vacated were on record for two years before plaintiff took his own conveyance. Now, section 923, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 845), requires instruments in writing conveying or affecting real estate to be recorded in the county where such real estate is situate. The next section reads: "Every such instrument in writing, certified and recorded in the manner hereinbefore prescribed, shall, from the time of filing the same with the recorder for record, impart notice to all persons of the contents thereof and all subsequent purchasers and mortgagees shall be deemed, in law and equity, to purchase with notice." In the face of that section, it is a vain thing for plaintiff to say (as he does) that he had no "actual notice" of these conveyances. He was bound to take notice. The statute makes no exception in favor of a blind man, or an unlettered man, or infant, or married woman, or any other person who may be an object of anxious care to a court of chancery; and it would be audacious for us to write in an exception. That the due and timely record of a properly acknowledged deed conveying real estate is conclusive notice to the whole world of its contents is a property rule in this state not to be trifled with or whittled away by judicial construction. Those who walk, as well as those who run, must be held to read the record of a deed. It is one case in which those who cannot read must read, and where all are presumed to be well read.

or privy to the fraud intended." In this case, conceding for present purposes that fraud was intended, yet it was a fraud against a specified creditor. Plaintiff defined, earmarked, and circumscribed the fraud by the evidence of McAnally, and showed it alone aimed at the machine company, a creditor, and not at subsequent purchasers, or, to use the language of the petition, "probable purchasers." The idea was to save the home to themselves, and it would not do to say they had purchasers in mind. Furthermore, it matters not what McAnally had in mind, the controlling question is what Martha Isabell had in mind. Davidson v. Dockery, 179 Mo., loc. cit. 697, 78 S. W. 624, and cases cited. We doubt not from this record that the afflicted wife of McAnally had no purpose to wrong innocent purchasers of the land, and never contemplated that her husband, after her death, would conspire with a scampish or slovenly abstracter to concoct a lying abstract and wrong a purchaser in that way. If it were ruled that such covinous or reckless performance wiped out the notice given by the deed record, under express statutory mandate, no vendee who held title by a voluntary conveyance as a gift would be safe in his estate so long as a subsequent purchaser from his donor could show that he was imposed upon by an inefficient, insolvent, or rascally abstracter.

(d) It is insisted that McAnally was not a competent witness to overturn the deeds in question. Up to this time we have treated his testimony as competent. McAnally's confession is all the evidence on the point, and appellant timely and aptly objected to its introduction, without avail. In my opinion he was clearly incompetent to reveal confidential conversations with his wife or overturn his own grant; but the question is not necessary to a decision of the case, and is therefore reserved.

The case in some of its features is a hard one; but plaintiff's possessory rights during the life of William F. McAnally do not, at first blush, seem to be in jeopardy, and, if his warranty deed conveyed any interest cast on McAnally by inheritance from one of his children, then, as already said, plaintiff may be a tenant in common with John and Curtis. If so, his betterments are not likely to be in jeopardy, and may be protected whenever partition will lie. However hard the case, we may not spoil the symmetry of the law or give relief to plaintiff at the expense of the minor heirs of Martha Isabell, who did plaintiff no wrong. Says Lord Campbell (See East India Co. v. Paul, Moore, P. C. 111): "It is the duty of all courts of justice to take tiff's bill as on a hearing on the merits, and render judgment against him for costs. All concur.

GARDNER v. METROPOLITAN ST. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 1.

Nov. 27, 1909.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 474*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—SUBJECT-MATTER OF TESTIMONY.

Persons who had observed and measured railway tracks with a yardstick or straight edge and a tape line could testify that one rail at a curve was an inch higher than the other, though they did not appear to be experts in such matters, and it was not shown that the measurements were made with a spirit level.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2203; Dec. Dig. § 474.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 98*)—RULINGS OF COURT.

Rulings of a court should be unequivocal and so definite in character as to leave no room for doubt by the jury as to what evidence is admitted and what excluded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 193, 249; Dec. Dig. § 98.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§§ 288, 289*)—RESERVATION OF GROUNDS—FAILURE TO ASSIGN ERROR IN MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

Where a court's rulings excluding various offers of testimony, and remarks of the judge made during the trial in the nature of comments on the evidence and mild criticisms of counsel were not assigned as grounds for new trial, so that the court could correct itself, they will not be reviewed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1691, 1677; Dec. Dig. §§ 288, 289.*]

4. EVIDENCE (§ 271*)—HEARSAY—REPORTS—PASSENGER—ACTIONS—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for injuries to a street car passenger struck by a beam near the track, a report of the motorman to the company giving his version of the accident was inadmissible, as an ex parte account, not under oath, and affording no opportunity for cross-examination by plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1087; Dec. Dig. § 271.*]

5. WITNESSES (§ 255*)—EXAMINATION—REFRESHING MEMORY.

If the date of an accident is in doubt, a motorman could refresh his memory from a written report made by him to the company without admitting it in evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 875; Dec. Dig. § 255.*]

6. CARRIERS (§ 280*)—CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS—STREET RAILWAYS—CARE REQUIRED.

It is the duty of a street railway company to exercise that high degree of care for the safety of passengers that a very careful person would use under like circumstances.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1089-1091; Dec. Dig. § 280.*]

7. CARRIERS (§ 292*)—INJURY TO PASSENGER—OBSTRUCTION NEAR TRACK—CROSS-BEAM ON TROLLEY POLE.

If a cross-beam on a pole carrying cross-wires to support the trolley wire has been placed nearer to the track than a very careful person would have permitted under like circumstances, and the company knew of such condition, or by the exercise of such high degree of care might have known it in time to have remedied it, and prevented injury to a passenger therefrom, and failed to do so, it would be liable for the injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1275; Dec. Dig. § 292.*]

8. CARRIERS (§ 292*)—CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS—STREET RAILWAYS—DUTY TO PASSENGERS.

Where a street railway company maintains a cross-beam carrying feed wires and bolted to one of the poles supporting a cross-wire which supports the trolley wire, the pole, cross-beam, and wire are necessary parts of the equipment used in furnishing the motive power for the cars, and the law imposes the same degree of care in providing such equipment as it does in furnishing safe cars in which passengers may ride.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1175; Dec. Dig. § 292.*]

9. TRIAL (§ 243*)—INSTRUCTIONS—INCONSISTENT INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction which in one clause states that a street railway company must exercise, for the safety of passengers, that high degree of care that a very careful and prudent person would use under like circumstances, and in another place states that it is only required to use ordinary care in that regard, being contradictory, is erroneous, as the jury had no means of knowing which one properly declared the law, and an appellate court has no means of knowing which one the jury followed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 564-566; Dec. Dig. § 243.*]

10. CARRIERS (§ 317*)—STREET RAILWAYS—INJURIES TO PASSENGERS—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for injuries to a street car passenger struck by a cross-beam near the track on a curve, evidence that one track at that place was higher than the other causing a car passing the beam, in rapid motion, to lurch, throwing the car near to the beam, was admissible on the question of the company's negligence.

11. CARRIERS (§ 316*)—STREET RAILWAYS—INJURIES TO PASSENGERS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

The rule that a passenger makes out a prima facie case of damages against a carrier for personal injuries when he shows that he was injured by a collision, and was himself free from negligence, applies only where the petition charges negligence in general terms, and does not apply where it specifically pleads the negligent acts which caused the injury, in which case the burden is upon plaintiff to prove his case and continues with him throughout the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1283-1294; Dec. Dig. § 316.*]

12. PLEADING (§ 433*)—SUFFICIENCY—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—CURE BY VERDICT.

An answer pleading contributory negligence in general terms like a plea of negligence in general terms is good after verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 1473; Dec. Dig. § 433.*]

13. CARRIERS (§ 347*)—STREET RAILWAYS—INJURY TO PASSENGERS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

In an action by a street car passenger for injuries from being struck by a beam near a track, evidence tending to show that he was riding with a portion of his arm protruding through the car window is sufficient to take the case to the jury on the question of contributory negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1380, 1402; Dec. Dig. § 347.*]

14. CARRIERS (§ 347*)—STREET RAILWAYS—INJURY TO PASSENGERS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Such an act of the passenger would not be negligence per se, preventing a recovery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1380, 1402; Dec. Dig. § 347.*]

15. CARRIERS (§ 315*)—STREET RAILWAYS—INJURIES TO PASSENGERS—PLEADING—ALLEGATION AND PROOF.

In an action by a street car passenger for injuries, the very act of negligence alleged must be proved, and, where it was alleged that plaintiff was injured on a south-bound car on the west side of a viaduct, he could not recover upon proof that he was injured on a north-bound car on the east side of the viaduct.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1281, 1282; Dec. Dig. § 315.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jackson County; Jno. G. Park, Judge.

Action by Alfred G. Gardner against the Metropolitan Street Railway Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded for a new trial.

The plaintiff was a passenger upon one of defendant's street cars, and while being carried as such he sustained the injuries complained of. He brought this suit in the circuit court of Jackson county to recover the sum of $5,000 damages for those injuries. The trial resulted in a judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed.

The petition upon which the cause was tried, formal parts omitted, was as follows: "For his cause of action plaintiff states: That each of the defendants is a corporation, duly incorporated and existing according to law, and that both the defendants have their general offices in Kansas City, Mo. That at all the times hereinafter mentioned or concerned the defendants owned, controlled, and operated a street railway in Kansas City, Wyandotte county, Kan., extending from Fifth and Central streets, in said Kansas City, Kan., in a southwesterly direction to the northern approach of a viaduct, extending northward and southward over certain railway tracks, on Seventh street in said city, and thence southward over said viaduct, and thence southward and eastward in said Kansas City, Kan., and finally to the stockyards which are located in both said Kansas City, Kan., and Kansas City, Mo. That at all said times said street railway was what is known as an electric railway; that is to say, the motive power which propelled the cars thereon was electricity, and was applied by means of what is known as a trolley wire running along above the tracks, and over the center of the cars, together with what is known as a trolley pole extending upward from the cars and fitting with a grooved pulley to the underside of said wire. That in constructing said railway the de-way, and about 40 feet south from the north end of said viaduct, and stretched a cross-wire from the upper end of said pole across and over said railway for the purpose of supporting said trolley wire, which trolley wire ran lengthwise with said railway. That the defendants also placed a cross-beam upon said pole, extending horizontally eastward and westward, for the support of two heavy cables, which rest upon the west end of said cross-beam. That said cross-beam is of hardwood, and is about 4 or 5 inches square and 4 or 5 feet long, and is placed upon said pole about 5½ feet above the car track. That the defendants negligently and carelessly placed said cross-beam upon said pole in such a way that the east end thereof extends about 2½ feet eastward from said pole, and at all times mentioned herein has extended so near to the north rail of said railway that it almost scrapes upon the cars as they pass along toward the south in crossing said viaduct. That the defendants negligently laid the tracks of said railway, on the west side of said viaduct, in such a manner that the east rail of said western track, at the point opposite to said cross-beam, was at all times herein concerned about one inch higher than the west rail thereof, and in that manner caused the cars—as they passed said point—to lean or pitch over to the westward; and, when said cars were running rapidly, said inequality in said rails caused them to lean or pitch further toward the west than when running slowly. That said railway where it crosses said viaduct is a double-track railway, and at all times herein concerned the cars ran southward on the west track and northward on the east track thereof. That the defendants negligently ran their cars (including the car on which plaintiff was injured, as hereafter mentioned) along said west track and passing said dangerous cross-beam without placing the proper guards to the windows thereof for the protection of passengers upon said cars. Plaintiff states: That on the 19th day of June, 1904, he boarded one of defendants' cars at said Fifth and Central streets, Kansas City, Kan., for the purpose of being carried as a passenger to said stock-yards, and paid his fare, to wit, five cents, to defendants' conductor in charge of said car. That said car had one seat on each side thereof running lengthwise with said car, and that the seat on the west side did not extend fully to the rear or north end of the car but that there was a space of about two feet between the end of the seat and the end of the car. That, when plaintiff entered said car, he found that both of the seats therein were fully occupied by passengers, and plaintiff was obliged to stand, and that the most convenient and comfortable place that plaintiff saw in which he could stand

That plaintiff stood in said space with his face toward the front of said car, and with his right elbow and lower arm resting upon the window sill of the rear window on the west side of the car, and that said window was pushed down from the top thereof until the top of said window was about even with the window sill. That, through the negligence of the defendants, there was no guard or other protection to said window, except that there were two or three bars placed horizontally across the window about four or five inches apart, and that the lower rod or bar was about 11 inches above the window sill. That plaintiff did not know of said dangerous cross-beam or of said inequality of said rails. That, as said car approached said cross-beam, the servants of the defendants in charge of the same negligently ran said car at a rapid rate of speed, so that, when the car struck said point where said rails were unequal as aforesaid, the car leaned or pitched over toward the west, and thus caused plaintiff's elbow to slip upon said window sill toward the west and slightly outside of the car, whereupon said cross-beam struck plaintiff's arm over the ulna bone, and just below the elbow, and cut plaintiff's arm to said ulna bone, and bruised and fractured the same, and thus forced plaintiff's arm backward and against the rear frame of said window, and broke the bone of plaintiff's arm just above the elbow, and forced the ends of said broken bone through the flesh and muscles of plaintiff's arm, and greatly bruised, wrenched, and dislocated plaintiff's elbow. Plaintiff states: That, by reason of said injuries, he has suffered and still continues to suffer great physical pain and mental anguish, and was confined to his house about six weeks, and has not been able to perform his usual labor since said injury occurred, and was obliged to expend and to obligate himself to expend about $130 for the services of physicians, and about $10 for medicines, and was obliged to be nursed and cared for by his wife and children, and that their services in so doing were of the reasonable value of $75. That said injuries have resulted in a stiffening and malformation of plaintiff's right elbow joint, and in weakening plaintiff's entire right arm, and that said elbow and arm are thus permanently injured. Plaintiff states that he is a tailor by trade and has been such all his life, and has no other trade or calling by which to support himself and family, and that, by reason of the injuries aforesaid, he is permanently disabled from pursuing said trade, and has lost and will lose his earnings in said trade during the remainder of his life, and that all said injuries have resulted from the negligence of the defendants in placing said cross-beam too near said car tracks and permit-to be laid unequal in height and to remain so, in failing to protect the window of said car in the proper manner as above mentioned, and in running said car at too great a speed at said dangerous place, and that the defendants knew of the dangerous condition of said cross-beam and said car and said tracks, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence could have known of the same. Plaintiff states that, by reason of said injuries resulting from the defendants' negligence as aforesaid, he has been damaged in the sum of $5,000," etc.

The answer of the Metropolitan consisted of a general denial and a general plea of contributory negligence. The cause was dismissed as to the Kansas City Elevated Railway Company. The reply was a general denial. Plaintiff's evidence tended to prove all of the allegations of the petition, and that of the defendant tended to prove that the plaintiff was injured while a passenger on one of its cars on the day and at the hour, as shown by plaintiff, and on the same viaduct, but that the injury occurred while the car was going north, on the east side of the viaduct, instead of on the west side of the viaduct, while the car was going south, as alleged by plaintiff. Defendant's evidence also tended to show that the injury occurred about 150 yards south of where plaintiff claims it occurred, and that the injury was caused by plaintiff's arm coming in contact with a trolley pole, which stood on the west side, some 10 or 12 inches from the line of the car, as it passed, instead of coming in contact with a cross-beam which stood on the east side, about the same distance from the line of the car, as plaintiff's evidence tended to show. In other words, there was no question raised as to the fact that plaintiff was a passenger, and that he was injured by defendant while he was being carried as such; the difference between them being as to when and where the injury occurred, and the question of negligence and contributory negligence.

The plaintiff asked the court to instruct the jury as follows:

"(1) The court instructs the jury that if you find from the evidence that the plaintiff was a passenger on one of the cars then being operated by the defendant in Kansas City, Kan., on or about the 19th day of June, 1904, and that said car was at that time being run southward over a viaduct which passes over certain railroad tracks on Seventh street in said city, and if you further find from the evidence that there was at said time a pole standing on said viaduct, and just west of the track on which said car was so running, and that there was a cross-beam bolted onto said pole in such a way that the east end of the same was very close to and within a few inches of said car as it was so passing along, and if you further find from the evidence that at said time, beam, the plaintiff's elbow or lower arm was brought into contact with said cross-beam, and that plaintiff was injured thereby, and if you further find from the evidence that at said time and place the defendant was guilty of negligence such as is defined in other instructions given you by the court, and that said injuries to plaintiff, if any, resulted from such negligence, then your verdict must be in favor of the plaintiff, unless you further find from the evidence that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence on his own part which directly contributed to said injuries.

"(2) The court instructs you that, if you find from the evidence that the plaintiff was a passenger on a car which was being operated by the defendant at the time and place referred to in other instructions, then it was the duty of the defendant to use and exercise that high degree of care, caution, and foresight for the safety of the plaintiff that a very careful and prudent person would use and exercise under like circumstances. And if you find from the evidence that at said time and place there was a post or pole standing at the west side of the track on which said car was running, and that there was a cross-beam bolted onto said pole in such a way that the east end of the same extended near enough to said track to endanger passengers on said car, and nearer to said track than a very careful and prudent person would have permitted under like circumstances, and that defendant knew of said condition of said cross-beam, or by the exercise of said high degree of care and caution might have known the same in time to have changed said cross-beam, and thereby prevented the injury to plaintiff, if any, then the defendant was negligent in said particular. Or, if you find from the evidence that at said time and place the window of said car at which the plaintiff claims to have been standing was not as well guarded or protected for the safety of passengers as a very careful and prudent person would have guarded or protected the same under like circumstances, and that defendant knew of such condition of said window, or by the exercise of said degree of care and caution might have known the same in time to have changed the same, and thereby prevented the injury to plaintiff, if any, then the defendant was negligent in said particular. Or if you find from the evidence that at said time and place the east rail of said track was higher than the west rail thereof, and that said inequality of the rails caused the car to lean or pitch over toward the west as it was passing said point, and thereby endanger passengers on said car, and that such inequality was greater than a very careful person would have permitted under like circumstances, and that defendant knew of said condition, or could have known the same by the exercise of said degree of care in time such injuries to plaintiff, if any, then defendant was negligent in said particular.

"(3) The court instructs you that the defense of contributory negligence, which is set up and charged by the defendant in this action, is an affirmative defense which must appear from the evidence, and that you cannot find a verdict against the plaintiff on this ground alone, unless it has been shown in the evidence that the plaintiff was guilty of some negligent act or acts on his own part which directly contributed to the injuries complained of. And such negligent act or acts must be such as a reasonably prudent person would not have been guilty of under like circumstances. In determining whether or not the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, as herein defined, you will take into consideration all the facts and circumstances shown in the evidence, and, unless it has been shown in the evidence that the plaintiff was guilty of some act or acts of negligence which a reasonably prudent person would not have been guilty of under like circumstances, and that such act or acts directly resulted in the injuries complained of, you will not find a verdict against the plaintiff upon the ground of contributory negligence alone.

"(4) You are further instructed that, if you shall find a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, you may assess his damages at such a sum, not exceeding $5,000, as you may believe from the evidence will be a fair and reasonable compensation to him: First. For such pain of body and mind, if any, as you may believe from the evidence that he has already suffered, and such bodily pain, if any, as you may believe from the evidence he is reasonably certain to suffer hereafter, as a direct result of the injuries complained of. Second. For such loss of earnings, if any, as you may believe from the evidence that he has sustained, or is reasonably certain to sustain hereafter, as a direct result of the injuries complained of. Third. For such permanent injuries to plaintiff's body, if any, as you may believe from the evidence that he has sustained as a direct result of said injuries. Fourth. For such expenses for doctor's bills, if any, not exceeding $100, as you may find from the evidence that he has necessarily incurred and expended as a result of the injuries complained of."

The court gave said instructions numbered 1, 3, and 4, but refused to give 2 as asked, but modified it by striking out the words "said high degree of care and caution," and inserting in their stead the words "ordinary care," and by detaching and eliminating therefrom the following clauses: "Or if you find from the evidence that at said time and place the east rail of said track was higher than the west rail thereof, and that said inequality of the rails caused the car to lean or pitch over toward the west as it was passing said said car, and that such inequality was greater than a very careful person would have permitted under like circumstances, and that defendant knew of said condition, or could have known the same by the exercise of said degree of care, in time to have repaired said track and prevented such injuries to plaintiff, if any, then defendant was negligent in said particular." The court gave instruction numbered 2 in its modified form. To which action of the court the plaintiff duly excepted.

The defendant, upon its part, prayed the court to instruct the jury as follows:

"(1) The court instructs the jury that the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to prove to your satisfaction by the preponderance of the credible testimony that defendant was guilty of negligence as submitted to you in these instructions, and this burden of proof continues and abides with the plaintiff throughout the entire trial; and, unless you believe and find from the evidence in this case that the plaintiff has proven by a preponderance of the credible testimony to your reasonable satisfaction that the defendant was guilty of negligence as defined in these instructions, and that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injuries complained of, then your verdict must be for the defendant. By 'preponderance of the evidence' is meant the greater weight of credible testimony.

"(2) The court instructs the jury that you are the sole judges of the credibility of the witnesses and the weight and value to be given to their testimony, and, in determining what weight and credit you will give to the testimony of any witness, you should consider his or her conduct and demeanor on the stand, his or her interest in the case on trial, his or her opportunity to know and be informed as to the facts on which they undertake to give testimony, and their ability to clearly remember and to clearly state such facts, their willingness or unwillingness to testify to any facts of which you may believe they have knowledge.

"(3) It was the duty of the plaintiff to exercise ordinary care for his own safety, and if he failed to do so, and such failure on his part directly contributed to the injuries complained of, then he cannot recover in this case, and your verdict will be for the defendant, even though you may find that the defendant was also negligent as defined in these instructions. By ordinary care, as used in this instruction, is meant such care as would be exercised by an ordinarily prudent person under like circumstances.

"(4) The court instructs the jury that there is no evidence that the car of defendant was run at a negligent rate of speed at the time and place of the accident.

"(5) The court instructs the jury that this case should be considered by you the same as if it was a contest between two persons of equal standing in the community. The fact that one of the parties is a corporation should not and must not affect your minds in any way in the consideration of the case. The rights of the parties should be and must be determined upon the evidence introduced and the instructions given to the jury, which are the law and the only law to guide you in your deliberations.

"(6) The court instructs the jury that if you find and believe from the evidence that the plaintiff knew or by the exercise of reasonable and ordinary care and diligence might or could have known, that if he put his arm out of the window, or through the bars upon the side of the car, there was danger of his arm being struck and injured, and that he negligently put his arm out of the window or through the bars, and was thereby struck and injured, then your verdict will be for the defendant.

"(7) The court instructs the jury that, unless you find and believe from the evidence that the plaintiff has proven by a preponderance of the testimony to your satisfaction that he was struck by a cross-beam on the west side of the viaduct about 80 feet south of the north end thereof while riding south upon defendant's car, your verdict must be for the defendant.

"(8) If you find from the evidence that plaintiff was injured on a north-bound car and on the east side of the viaduct, and not on a south-bound car on the west side of the viaduct, your verdict will be for defendant."

The court, over the objections of plaintiff's counsel, gave to the jury the foregoing instructions. To which action of the court in giving same the plaintiff at the time duly excepted.

The errors assigned by counsel for appellant relate to the admission and rejection of testimony, and to the giving and refusing instructions. We will mention such parts of the evidence and such of the instructions during the course of the opinion as may be necessary for a proper determination of the questions presented for our consideration.

Theoph L. Carns, for appellant. Jno. H. Lucas, for respondent.

WOODSON, J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. We will first consider the errors assigned regarding the rulings of the court as to the rejection of testimony offered by the appellant. Appellant offered the testimony of some two or three witnesses who had observed and measured with a yardstick or straight edge and a tape line the tracks of respondent just opposite the cross-beam mentioned in the evidence, to the effect that the top surface of the east rail of the west track was one inch higher than the west rail thereof. This evidence was offered for the purpose of proving that, when the car passed the cross-beam in rapid motion, it was thereby caused to lurch or pitch to the westward until the line of the car passed so near to said beam as to throw appellant's arm against the same, and thereby inflicted the injury complained of. This evidence was by the court excluded, for the reasons that it was not shown that the witnesses who took the measurements were experts in such matters, and because it was not shown that the measurements were made with the assistance of a spirit level. The exclusion of that evidence was clearly erroneous, as will appear by reading the following authorities: 17 Cyc. 102, 104; Eyerman v. Sheehan, 52 Mo. 221; Heman Construction Co. v. O'Brien, 81 Mo. App. 639; McPherson v. Railroad, 97 Mo. 253, 10 S. W. 846; Charlton v. Railway, 200 Mo. 413, 98 S. W. 529; Hovey v. Sawyer, 5 Allen (Mass.) 554; Eastman v. Amoskeag, etc., 44 N. H. 143, 82 Am. Dec. 201; Vermillion v. City of Vermillion, 6 S. D. 466, 61 N. W. 802; Morrisette v. Railway, 76 Vt. 267, 56 Atl. 1102; Posachane Water Co. v. Standart, 97 Cal. 476, 32 Pac. 532; Galveston, etc., Ry. v. Ford, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 181, 54 S. W. 37; Olson v. Oregon Short Line, 24 Utah, 460, 68 Pac. 148; Lightfoot v. Traction Co., 123 Wis. 479, 102 N. W. 30.

The rule respecting measurements is stated as follows in 17 Cyc. p. 102: "An observer may state his estimate of size, including height, depth, breadth, thickness, and width, and any change in those or other dimensions. The statement is merely one of fact, as to which any person who has applied the measurements may testify, with weight proportionate to his age and experience." And on page 104 of same volume it is said: "In the absence of adequate measurements, any person of adequate knowledge and judgment may state the grade of a ditch, of a hill, or a railroad track." In 5 Allen, 554, the Supreme Court of Massachusetts said: "As to where the highest point of a hill is, is a question upon which one man could not have any more or better means of forming an opinion than any other person of ordinary intelligence; and it is not a question for expert testimony." In Eastman v. Amoskeag, 44 N. H. 143, 82 Am. Dec. 201, the Supreme Court said: "In questions relating to heights and distances, and as to the number, quantity, and dimensions of things, a witness may not be able to testify without an implied expression of opinion; but this is no objection to the testimony upon such points and subjects." It has also been held competent for a witness to testify as to the height to which a stream of water was thrown, when his only criterion was the height of a house nearby, and he did not know the height of the house (Vermillion v. Vermillion, 6 S. D. 466, 61 N. W. 802), and for a witness to testify as to the size of a lantern simply upon inspection (Morrisette v. Railway, 76 Vt. 267, 56 Atl. 1102). So also held competent for a witness to testify that the grade of a ditch was not more than five feet to the mile. Here the appellant contended that, since the grade was a matter susceptible to exact measurement, the judgment of the witness was not competent. But the court held otherwise, and stated that, although this evidence might be overcome by a showing of the exact measurements, still the evidence was competent. Posachane Water Co. v. Standart, 97 Cal. 476, 32 Pac. 532. It has been held competent for a witness to testify that there was a sharp curve and a sharp grade on the railroad at the point of accident. Galveston, etc., Ry. v. Ford, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 131, 54 S. W. 37; Olson v. Oregon Short Line, 24 Utah, 460, 68 Pac. 148. It is competent for a witness to estimate the height of a wood wagon. Lightfoot v. Traction Co., 123 Wis. 479, 102 N. W. 30. In this state a witness was permitted to give his estimate of the depth, or thickness, of broken stone. And the court further held that the witness might add his opinion under certain circumstances. Eyerman v. Sheehan, 52 Mo. 221. This court also held that it was competent for a witness to give his estimate of the distance of a crane from a passing train from his observation alone. Charlton v. Railway, 200 Mo. 413, 98 S. W. 529.

Counsel for respondent do not contend said evidence was not competent; but their insistence is that said evidence was in fact admitted by the court, and not excluded, as contended for by counsel for appellant. By reading page 56 of the abstract of the record, it will be seen that witness Carns testified as follows: "The east track was about an inch higher than the west track at that point. The east rail of the west track was about an inch higher than the west rail at that point, and, when Mr. Gardner and Mr. Gilley went over it, the track was in the same condition that it was when I first went there." And on page 59 appellant testified: "Well, we measured the east track, and we found it about an inch higher than the west one; that is, on the curve." While the record shows that Carns and appellant made the foregoing statements accredited to them, yet the ruling of the court is not clear and definite upon their admission until we reach the ruling of the court upon the admission of the testimony of the witness Bullock. On pages 109 and 110 of the abstract the following occurred: "Q. State to the jury what was the condition of the track over the viaduct, Mr. Bullock, with reference to its being either rail level with the other along the other side. A. The track was perfectly level. Mr. Carns: I object to that question until it is shown that the witness had knowledge of that particular time. The Court: Yes; and unless he put a level to it. Mr. Loomis: The other gentlemen did not. The Court: I held it was no evidence. There is no issue on that." This ruling of the court made definite and certain that which was before indefinite and uncertain. The rulings of the court should always be unequivocal and so definite in character as to leave no room for doubt in the minds of the jury as to what evidence is admitted and as to what is excluded. Without the jurors know positively what evidence is to be considered by them, they are in no position to properly consider the case, or to return an intelligent verdict. Even without the last ruling of the court, its previous rulings were so indefinite and uncertain as to afford just grounds for complaint on the part of appellant; and, with the last added, there can be no doubt but what the effect thereof was to exclude all the evidence which tended to show the rails of the track were uneven at the place of the accident. This is also made clear by the action of the court in striking out of appellant's second instruction all reference to his right to a recovery on account of the uneven condition of the rails. This instruction will receive further consideration presently. The exclusion of this evidence was error. The exclusion of that evidence virtually took from the jury the charge of negligence regarding the throwing of appellant against the cross-beam.

2. Counsel for appellant also complains of the action of the court for excluding various offers of testimony; but by an examination of the motion for a new trial, as suggested by counsel for respondent, we find that none of those rulings was assigned as a ground for a new trial. This court will not reverse a judgment of the trial court for error which was not called to its attention in the motion for a new trial. Coffey v. Carthage, 200 Mo., loc. cit. 629, 98 S. W. 562; State v. Miles, 199 Mo. 530, 98 S. W. 25; State ex rel. v. Trust Co., 209 Mo., loc. cit. 494, 108 S. W. 97.

3. Certain remarks of the judge made during the progress of the trial, in the presence and hearing of the jury, in the nature of comments upon the evidence and mild criticisms of counsel for appellant, constitute the basis of this complaint. Whatever merit there might have been in this assignment appellant is in no position to complain, for the reason that the attention of the court was not called to those matters in the motion for a new trial. See authorities cited under the preceding paragraph.

4. The same is true with regard to the objection lodged against the testimony of the witness Ithry Fitzhugh giving his opinion as to appellant's condition at the time the injury was inflicted. The motion for a new trial did not call the attention of the court to this alleged error; consequently the court had no opportunity to correct its ruling regarding the admission of that testimony.

5. Over the objection of counsel for appellant, the court admitted in evidence the following written report of the injury, made by Joseph Floerke, motorman, who was in charge of the car which injured appellant:

Office of Metropolitan Street Railway Company. Kansas City Elevated Railway Company, 621 Temple Block, Kansas City, Missouri, 6-20, 1904. No. 49656. Mr. Jas. Floerke, 1512 North 19, Ka.: Your name having been returned to us by a conductor as one of the several witnesses to an accident which is said to have occurred on our line at 7th and Kansas—4:30 p. m. June 19, we therefore ask you, as a favor, to answer the following questions, in order to have as complete an account as can be obtained.

Respectfully,

Bernard Corrigan, President.

Questions.	Answers.
What is your full name?	Joseph Floerke.
Address?	1909 Dora Ave. K. C. Mo.
Occupation?	Junk dealer.
Did you see the accident?
Give date and time.	June 19th, 4:30 p. m.
Where did it occur?	7th St. Wydock, K. C. Ka.
Where were you when the accident took place?	In front platform.
Was the train in motion?	Yes.
Was the bell ringing?	Not necessary at the point.
Do you know any one else that saw the accident?	No.
If so, give name and address.
Who in your opinion is to blame for the accident?	The injured man.
Please give full account of the accident as witnessed by you, showing no favor to either side.	I have seen the man leaning or resting white his arm in railing or window protachen on car and the first post came in contact and the man got sick.

Date, June 19, 1904.

Joseph Floerke. [Signature.]

Address: 1909 Dora avenue, Kansas City, Missouri.

It was stated by the court that this report was admitted for the purpose of showing the date of the injury. Clearly the admission of this report was erroneous. There was no dispute as to the date of the injury. The petition stated that it occurred on June 19, 1904, and all of the evidence bearing upon that point which was introduced by both appellant and respondent showed the injury occurred upon that date. If the date of the injury had been in dispute, then the motorman could have refreshed his memory from the report, but the report itself was not competent, and should have been excluded. By its admission the jury was permitted to hear read the ex parte account of the injury made by the motorman, not under oath, nor was he cross-examined by any one on behalf of appellant. That evidence was highly prejudicial to him, and should have been excluded. Sharp v. Railway Co., 213 Mo. 517, 111 S. W. 1154. But, notwithstanding this error was committed, we cannot reverse the judgment therefor, for the reason that appellant did not complain of that error in his motion for a new trial. Consequently he cannot avail himself of it. Coffey v. Carthage, supra.

6. The action of the court in refusing to give for appellant instruction numbered 2, as asked by him, and in modifying it, and giving it in said modified form, is complained of as error by counsel for appellant. There are two errors assigned to that ruling.

It is first insisted that it was the duty of the respondent to use and exercise that high degree of care, caution, and foresight for the safety of the appellant that a very careful and prudent person would have used and exercised under like circumstances. And that the court should have told the jury that if they believed said cross-beam was placed nearer to the track in question than a very careful and prudent person would have permitted under like circumstances, and that respondent knew of said condition of said cross-beam, or, by the exercise of said high degree of care and caution might have known the same in time to have changed it and thereby prevented the injury, and that it failed to do so, then appellant was entitled to a recovery. This is clearly the law of this state, as has been held by this court in scores of cases. Lemon v. Chancellor, 68 Mo. 340, 30 Am. Rep. 799. This cross-beam was bolted to one of the poles which supported the wire which supplied the feed wire which furnished the electricity for the trolley wire. The pole, cross-beam, and wire were all necessary parts of the equipment furnished and used in furnishing the motive power for the cars. And the law imposed the same degree of care upon respondent in providing and furnishing that equipment as it did in furnishing safe cars in which passengers were to ride. In discussing this question, this court in the case of Och v. M., K. & T. Ry. Co., 130 Mo., loc. cit. 51, 31 S. W. 968, 36 L. R. A. 442, said: "While carriers of passengers are not insurers of their safety, and are not responsible when all reasonable care, skill, and diligence, prudence, and foresight have been employed, the law imposes upon them the utmost care and skill in selecting and furnishing safe means of transportation, and to that end to provide safe coaches and appliances, necessary for that purpose, including every part and parcel thereof, which very prudent men would exercise under like circumstances, and, when the injury to the plaintiff was shown to have been occasioned by the falling upon her head of a ventilating window from the coach in which she was riding, then it devolved upon the defendant to show by a preponderance of the evidence that the injury was caused by something not under its control, and not from any fault, want of care, or watchfulness upon its part. The same degree of care was required of defendant as to all parts and all kinds of its property used in the transportation of its passengers as compared with liability to cause injury to them. The same rule applies when the injury is caused by the want of diligence or care by those employed by the carrier. In Meler v. Railroad, 64 Pa. 225, 8 Am. Rep. 581, it was said: 'Prima facie, where a passenger, being carried on a train, is injured without fault of his own, there is a legal presumption of negligence, casting upon the carrier the onus of disproving it.' * * * This is the rule when the injury is caused by a defect in the road, cars, machinery, or by a want of diligence or care in those employed, or by any other thing which the company can or ought to control as a part of its duty, to carry the passengers safely; but this rule of evidence is not conclusive." See, also, Clark v. Railroad, 127 Mo. 197, 29 S. W. 1013; Dougherty v. Railroad, 81 Mo. 325, 51 Am. Rep. 239. The refusal of the court to give appellant's instruction which so declared the law was error. But counsel for respondent insists that the court so instructed the jury. In a sense that is true, but it is also true that in the same instruction at another place the court told the jury that respondent was only required to use ordinary care in that regard. So the most that can be said of this instruction is that the two clauses mentioned are inconsistent with and contradictory of each other. Such an instruction is erroneous. The jury had no means of knowing which of the two properly declared the law of the case, and we have no means of knowing which of the two the jury did follow.

And the second error urged against the ruling of the court relates to its action in striking therefrom the paragraph submitting to the jury the question of respondent's negligence in constructing and maintaining the east rail of the track in question higher than the west rail thereof, and that, in consequence thereof, the car was caused to lurch or pitch so near to the cross-beam as to injure appellant's arm. The evidence which tended to prove those facts should have been admitted, as before stated, and this clause of this instruction should have been given, submitting that question to the jury. This question came before this court in the case of Gage v. St. Louis Transit Co., 211 Mo. 139, 156, 109 S. W. 13, 18. This language was there used: "Plaintiff complains of the action of the court in refusing to permit her to prove that street cars while in motion will rock and sway from side to side on account of the inequalities of the track. We are of the opinion that said ruling was not error, for the reason that it is common knowledge that a car being propelled by steam or electricity over a railroad track will be swayed by inequalities of the track. Geitz v. Railroad, 72 Wis. 307, 39 N. W. 866; Railroad v. Smith, 25 App. D. C., loc. cit. 271 (5 L. R. A. [N. S.] 274). The juror's knowledge of those facts is equal to that of any witness who might testify upon the subject. The swaying of the car is caused by the operation of the law of gravity and the mechanical forces used in propelling the car. When a wheel of the car comes to a low place on the rail, the law of gravity carries it to the lowest point, and the mechanical forces operating upon the car in turn, raises it to the highest point of the rail. This motion of the car will cause the car to rock from side to side where there are inequalities in the surface of the two rails; and if there are no inequalities, but both rails are depressed alike, then the motion of the car will be from end to end, and not from side to side. All men of ordinary intelligence and observation know those facts; and the testimony of witnesses explaining those motions and their causes would shed no additional light upon the question. It is proper, however, to show whether or not the surface of the rails and tracks at the point of the injury were even or uneven at the time of the accident."

We are therefore of the opinion that the court erred in excluding said evidence and in refusing appellant's second instruction as asked; and also in modifying it and giving it in its modified form.

7. Instructions numbered 1 and 7, given on behalf of respondent, are complained of by counsel for appellant. They, in effect, told the jury that the burden of proof was upon appellant to prove his case, and that said burden continued with him throughout the case. Appellant invokes the doctrine that a passenger makes out a prima facie case of damages against a common carrier for personal injuries when he shows that he was injured by a collision and was himself free from negligence. Olsen v. Citizens' Ry. Co., 152 Mo. 426, 54 S. W. 470; Orcutt v. Century Building Co., 214 Mo. 35, 112 S. W. 532. This rule only applies where the petition charges negligence in general terms, and does not apply where it specifically pleads the negligent acts which caused the injury, as the petition in this case does. Beave v. Transit Co., 212 Mo. 331, 111 S. W. 52; Klebe v. Distilling Co., 207 Mo. 480, 105 S. W. 1057, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 140; Kirkpatrick v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 211 Mo. 68, 109 S. W. 682. We therefore hold under the pleadings in this case there was no error in giving the instructions complained of.

8. It is the next insistence of counsel for appellant that the court erred in submitting to the jury the question of contributory negligence. It is first claimed the court erred in that regard for the reason that contributory negligence was not pleaded. Counsel is in error in this. The answer pleads contributory negligence in general terms, which, like a plea of negligence in general terms, is good after verdict. The second contention is that there was no evidence which tended to show appellant was guilty of contributory negligence. Counsel is also in error in this matter. The evidence tended to show that appellant was riding with a portion of his arm protruding through the car window. This alone was sufficient to justify the court in submitting to the jury the question of contributory negligence. Gage v. St. Louis Transit Co., 211 Mo. 139, 109 S. W. 13. There was no error in submitting the question of appellant's contributory negligence to the jury. But the court should not have told the jury that such act constituted negligence per se, and would prevent a recovery. Gage

v. St. Louis Transit Co., supra; Murphy v. Railway, 115 Mo. 111, 21 S. W. 862; Seymour v. Citizens' Ry. Co., 114 Mo. 266, 21 S. W. 739.

9. The final insistence of counsel for appellant is that instructions numbered 7 and 8 given by the court on behalf of appellant are erroneous. They, in effect, told the jury that, if unless they found from the evidence that appellant was struck by a cross-beam on the west side of the viaduct about 80 feet south of the north end thereof while he was riding south upon one of respondent's cars, then their verdict should be for respondent. The petition charged and appellant's evidence showed that he was injured on a south-bound car and on the west side of the viaduct; while the evidence of respondent tended to show that he was injured on a north-bound car and on the east side of the viaduct. Appellant contends that, if it be conceded the respondent's version of the facts was true, still that was not such a total departure between the allegations of the petition and the proof as would prevent a recovery, but was simply a variance which was not fatal to a recovery. We are unwilling to lend our assent to this insistence, but are in full accord with the following views expressed by counsel for respondent upon that subject. "It was charged that a certain combination of circumstances produced the injury. These were: A cross-beam placed too close to the west track, about 80 feet south of the north end of the viaduct; that the east rail of the west track, at that particular point, was an inch higher than its mate; that this car was run over this spot at an excessive rate of speed, which caused the car to lurch or lean toward this cross-beam, and the injury was thus produced. Plaintiff can only recover by proving that he was hurt by some one or all of these acts. No law is better settled than this." There is no pretense that these same conditions existed at the place where respondent's evidence showed the injury occurred; but concede that the same condition did exist. Still they were not the same as those charged in the petition, and which appellant's evidence showed did exist in fact, and which caused the injury. "The very act of negligence alleged must be proven, if a specified act is alleged." Spiro v. Transit Co., 102 Mo. App. 261, 76 S. W. 684; McCarthy v. Hotel Co., 144 Mo. 397, 48 S. WILSON v. DARROW et al.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 1. Nov. 27, 1909.)

1. ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL (§ 74*)—APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 334*)—TIME FOR REVIVAL—PROCEEDINGS.

After the lapse of the term at which the judgment was rendered, the trial court has no power to revive the cause on the death of a party pending his appeal and authorize the new party to file a bill of exceptions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Abatement and Revival, Cent. Dig. §§ 429-444; Dec. Dig. § 74;* Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 334.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 486*)—PLEADINGS TO SUPPORT—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

A judgment without any statement of facts constituting the cause of action is void on collateral attack.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dec. Dig. § 486.*]

3. ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL (§ 75*)—REVIVAL OF ACTION.

A suit cannot be revived except in the mode provided by statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Abatement and Revival, Cent. Dig. § 446; Dec. Dig. § 75.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 189*)—RESERVATION OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW.

The objection that a motion to revive the cause in the name of a stranger on plaintiff's death does not charge a transfer of interest in the subject-matter may be first raised on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1206-1215; Dec. Dig. § 189.*]

5. ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL (§ 72*)—REVIVAL OF ACTION—PROCEEDINGS.

The trial court has no power, under Rev. St. 1899, §§ 756, 758 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 739, 741), to revive a suit in the name of a stranger on the death of plaintiff, in the absence of allegation or proof of a transfer of interest in the subject-matter; and defendant's failure to show cause against the revivor within the time limited by section 758 does not prevent him from contesting its validity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Abatement and Revival, Cent. Dig. §§ 378-391; Dec. Dig. § 72.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 334*)—PARTIES—DEATH OF PARTY—REVIVAL.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 858 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 806), authorizing revivor in the Supreme Court in favor of executors, administrators, heirs, or devisees on the death of appellant pending appeal, an order of the trial court reviving the cause in the name of a stranger as the transferee of appellant's interest in the subject-matter is void.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Adair County; Nat M. Shelton, Judge.

Action by Frederick J. Wilson against Orilla F. Darrow and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

This suit was instituted by Frederick J. Wilson against Orilla F. Darrow and others, to determine title to certain real estate situate in Adair county, under section 650, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 667). The petition was substantially in the words of ed, setting up various defenses. A trial was had at the January term, 1907, of the Adair circuit court, which resulted in a judgment in favor of the defendants, and the plaintiff appealed by what is known as the "short method." During the same term the court duly granted plaintiff the right to file a bill of exceptions during the May term thereof, and during said May term the court extended the time for filing the bill of exceptions to during the October term thereof.

November 7, 1907, during the October term, 1907, the following was entered of record by order of the court: "Comes now the plaintiff herein by attorneys and files suggestion of the death of plaintiff, with entrance of appearance of Lillie B. Wilson, Lucile Wilson and Forest B. Wilson in this cause." Afterwards on the same day, November 7th, the following was by order of the court entered of record therein: "Comes now Lillie B. Wilson, Forest B. Wilson, and Lucile Wilson, and show to the court that the plaintiff in said cause, Frederick J. Wilson, departed this life on the 30th day of May, 1907, and that Lillie B. Wilson, Forest B. Wilson, and Lucile Wilson are his sole and only heirs at law; that said Forest B. Wilson and Lucile Wilson are minors. Now, therefore, the above Lillie B. Wilson, Forest B. Wilson, and Lucile Wilson hereby enter their appearance, and ask that a guardian ad litem be appointed by the court for said Forest B. Wilson and Lucile Wilson, and that said cause be revived and continued in the name of said Lillie B. Wilson, Forest B. Wilson, and Lucile Wilson as plaintiffs, and that the name and style of said action shall hereafter from this date be Lillie B. Wilson et al. v. Orilla F. Darrow et al." November 8, 1907, during said October term, 1907, of said court, suggestion of death of Frederick J. Wilson was filed by the Second National Bank of Jackson, Tenn., by their attorneys, Campbell & Ellison, G. C. Weatherby and A. Doneghy. Afterwards on the same day, November 8, 1907, during the said term said court caused to be entered of record therein the following: "Death of Frederick J. Wilson suggested on record, Second National Bank of Jackson, Tenn., substituted as plaintiff as the successor in interest of Frederick J. Wilson, deceased. It appearing to the court that Lillie B. Wilson, widow and executrix of Frederick J. Wilson, deceased, refuses to be substituted as plaintiff, and refuses to execute the trust in said cause, and that Forest B. Wilson and Lucile Wilson, the sole and only children of said Frederick J. Wilson, are minors, and cannot execute said trust. Cause revived in the name of said Second National Bank as plaintiff against Orilla F. Darrow and others, defendants. Summons ordered issued commanding Lillie B. Wilson, widow and executrix of Frederick J. Wilson, deceased, and Forest B. Wilson and Lucile Wilson, minor

F. Darrow, Frederick L. Darrow, Mary L. Hamilton, Ellen A. Foster, and Charles E. Darrow to appear on or before the fourth day of the next term of said court to be begun and holden on the third Monday in January, 1908, to show cause, if any, why said cause should not stand revived and be continued in the name of the Second National Bank as plaintiff."

Afterwards, on November 8, 1907, there appears on the record of said court the following: "November 8, 1907. Second National Bank, Plaintiff v. Orilla F. Darrow et al., Defendants. Now at this day is received and filed bill of exceptions, which said bill of exceptions was taken and saved on the part of the defendant in the trial of this cause, and duly signed by Hon. Nat M. Shelton, judge of this court." January 2, 1908, in vacation of said court, a summons was issued with copy of suggestions of the death of plaintiff, with notice to revive in name of Second National Bank of Jackson, Tenn., summoning Lillie B. Wilson, Forest B. Wilson, Lucile Wilson, Orilla F. Darrow, Frederick L. Darrow, Mary L. Hamilton, Ellen A. Foster, and Charles E. Darrow. February 23, 1908, alias sciri facias issued to sheriff of St. Louis for defendant Charles E. Darrow. May 18, 1908, plaintiff orders alias writ for defendant Charles E. Darrow. December 10, 1908, order of publication issued for defendant Charles E. Darrow. January 20, 1909, defendants Orilla Darrow, Fred Darrow, Mary Hamilton, Ellen Foster file motion to quash writ. February 2, 1909, Charles E. Darrow files motion to quash order of publication. Said motion (formal parts omitted) is as follows: "Comes now defendant Charles E. Darrow for the purpose of this motion, and appearing for no other purpose whatever, and moves the court to quash the order of publication herein for the following reasons: Because the same was made and published without authority of law; because no order of court was made authorizing the same; because the court had no jurisdiction to make or order the same; because the whole proceeding for revival of said cause is void and wholly without authority of law." On February 2, 1909, during January term, 1909, the motion of defendant Charles E. Darrow to quash order of publication was sustained.

Counsel for respondent has filed in this court the following motion, to wit: "The respondents move the court to strike out the bill of exceptions herein: Because the same is filed without any authority of law. And because the same was not filed by a party to the record. Because the record shows that the judgment was rendered at the January term, 1907. That at the January term, 1907, the appeal was granted and leave given appellant to file his bill of exceptions during the May term, 1907. At the May term on May 20, 1907, the court extended court, on November 8, 1908, a bill of exceptions entitled 'Second National Bank v. Orilla F. Darrow, et al.' was filed. Because after the death of the appellant no one could appear in the cause, take any order, or file any paper until the cause was revived. Because no leave of court was ever granted to Second National Bank to file said bill of exceptions. Because after granting of the appeal, and after lapse of the term, the circuit court lost all jurisdiction of the cause, and there was no power in that court to revive the cause."

Counsel for respondents make the following suggestions or objections to reviving cause in name of Second National Bank: "This case cannot be revived in the name of the Second National Bank for the following reasons: The plaintiff, Fred. J. Wilson, died May 30, 1907, during the May term of the circuit court. Proceedings for reviving the cause could have been instituted during the term in that court, but were not. On the showing made by Second National Bank on its application to be substituted as plaintiff, Fred. J. Wilson had the legal title to the land, and when he died that title passed to his heirs, and said bank has not succeeded to that interest. It has no more title or interest now than it had when the suit was begun. The trial and judgment in the case settled it that Wilson had no title. A trial and judgment with the bank as plaintiff could only decide whether the bank had any equity. That point would be best settled if the bank would sue the Wilson heirs. The time within which any one could be substituted as plaintiff has passed."

Campbell & Ellison; A. Doneghy, and G. C. Weatherby, for appellant. H. F. Millan, for respondents.

WOODSON, J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. Counsel for respondents has filed a motion in this court to strike from the record the bill of exceptions filed in the cause by the Second National Bank. His motion is based upon the following facts, disclosed by the record, namely: That the judgment appealed from was rendered at the January term, 1907. At the same term an appeal was taken, and leave was given to appellant to file his bill of exceptions during the following May term. At the latter term the court extended the time for filing same until or during the October term of the same year. On May 30, 1907, the appellant died. At the October term, on November 8, 1908, a bill of exceptions, entitled the "Second National Bank v. Orilla F. Darrow et al.," was filed. Upon that state of the record counsel for appellant contends that, after the circuit court granted the appeal, which was at the January term, 1907, and after the lapse of the a bill of exceptions in the cause. In our opinion that contention is well-founded, for the reason that after the lapse of the term, the circuit court has no jurisdiction whatever over the cause, except to make such orders as are provided for by statute, and the order reviving a cause is not one of them. Crawford v. Railroad, 171 Mo., loc. cit. 74, 75, 66 S. W. 350. There is nothing in the case cited lending countenance to the contention that the circuit court had the authority to make an order of revival after the expiration of the term at which the judgment was rendered. What was there said is directly to the contrary, and is a denial of such authority. In the discussion of this question Judge Gantt clearly stated the law as follows: "The objection by the defendant is that the order of the circuit court purporting to revive the suit in the name of Gabbert, the administrator, was void, and said court was without jurisdiction to do so, because by the allowance of the appeal that court lost jurisdiction of said cause, and had no power to permit such revivor. In the determination of this controversy we must call to our aid certain fundamental principles. Thus it is settled law in this state that during the whole of the term in which any judicial act is done, the proceedings are considered to continue in fieri, and, even after a judgment has been rendered, the record remains in the breast of the judges of the court, and is therefore subject to amendment or alteration as they may direct, but cannot be so amended after the lapse of the term further than by nunc pro tunc entries which make the record speak the exact truth of what did occur. Aull v. Trust Co., 149 Mo. 1, 50 S. W. 289; Rottmann v. Schmucker, 94 Mo. 144, 7 S. W. 117; Caldwell v. Lockridge, 9 Mo. 362; State ex rel. v. Treasurer, 43 Mo. 228; McCabe v. Lewis, 76 Mo. 296. And it is equally well determined that this power of the court over its own records, and its right to amend, correct, and complete the same, is not affected by the fact that an appeal has been taken from its judgment. Exchange Bank v. Allen, 68 Mo. 474; De Kalb Co. v. Hixon, 44 Mo. 341; Jones v. Ins. Co., 55 Mo. 342; Gamble v. Daugherty, 71 Mo. 599. While a different doctrine was announced in Ladd v. Couzins, 35 Mo. 513, that case was subsequently discredited in Gamble v. Daugherty, supra, so that it is the settled doctrine that, though an appeal transfers jurisdiction of the case, still the trial court has full jurisdiction and control of its own record, and may, notwithstanding the appeal, amend, correct, and perfect the same so that it shall show exactly what transpired in said court. State v. Logan, 125 Mo. 22, 23 S. W. 176." In the case at bar the term had fully expired at the time the order of revivor was made and entered of record. So 102 S. W. 978, this court held that the circuit court had no authority, even to sign a bill of exceptions, after the expiration of the term at which the judgment was rendered, except where it was expressly empowered to do so by statute. And in discussing a similar question this court in banc, in the case of State ex rel. v. Patterson, 207 Mo., loc. cit. 147, 105 S. W. 1053, said: "And upon that principle the circuit court has no power or jurisdiction to make an order after the expiration of the time within which the statute commands it to be done." We are therefore of the opinion that the order of the circuit court reviving the cause in the name of the Second National Bank, and authorizing it to file a bill of exceptions herein, was a nullity, and neither the order reviving the cause, nor the bill of exceptions filed by the bank, are properly before this court; and for that reason this court has no authority to consider the merits of the case presented here through those void orders.

2. There is another equally valid reason why this court cannot look into the merits of this case, and that is this: The suit was brought by Wilson, and he appealed from the judgment rendered against him, and then died. Under that state of facts, if we confine ourselves to the practice act applicable to circuit courts, then there was but one way by which the action could have been revived in that court in the name of the bank, and that was by suggesting the death of Wilson, and then in some appropriate manner charged and shown to the court that since the trial, and prior to his death, Wilson had transferred his interests in the cause to it, and then asked for an order of revivor in its name. There is no pretense made here that any such transfer was ever made by Wilson to the bank, nor did the motion (which I gather from the record was oral) for an order of revivor contain any charge of such a transfer, nor does the record disclose that any evidence was introduced tending to show such a transfer.

The only record entry bearing upon the question of revivor was made during the October term, 1907, which was on the 8th day of November. That order is as follows: "Death of Frederick J. Wilson suggested on the record. Second National Bank of Jackson, Tenn., substituted as plaintiff as the successor in interest of Frederick J. Wilson, deceased. It appearing to the court that Lillie B. Wilson, widow and executrix of Frederick J. Wilson, deceased, refuses to be substituted as plaintiff, and refuses to execute the trust in said cause, and that Forest B. Wilson and Lucile Wilson, the sole and only children of said Frederick J. Wilson, are minors and cannot execute said trust, said cause is revived in the name of said Second National Bank, as plaintiff, against Orilla F. Darrow and others, defendants. Summons ordered issued, commanding said Lillie B. Wilson, widow and and Forest B. Wilson and Lucile Wilson, minor children of said Frederick J. Wilson, Orilla F. Darrow, Frederick Darrow, Mary L. Hamilton, Ellen A. Foster, and Charles E. Darrow to appear on or before the fourth day of the next term of said court to be begun and holden on the third Monday in January, 1908, to show cause, if any, why said cause should not stand revived and be continued in the name of the Second National Bank as plaintiff." In this connection it should be borne in mind that the widow and heirs at law of Wilson had previously suggested his death, and had asked that the cause be revived in their names, but, instead of passing upon their motion, the court took up the motion of the bank, and made the order of revivor before set forth.

As before stated, the court, without any allegation or proof whatever of a transfer of Wilson's interest in the subject-matter of the cause to the bank, "substituted the bank as plaintiff as the successor in interest of Frederick J. Wilson, deceased." The record does not show, nor do counsel for the bank contend, that the court found the fact to be that Wilson had transferred his interest in the subject-matter to the bank, but they seek to escape the effects of that omission by insisting that the order of revivor, under section 758, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 741), became absolute and conclusive upon defendants' failure to appear on or before the fourth day of the term of the court to which the summons was returnable, and move the court to set aside the provisional order of revivor. In other words, defendants by not so moving in the premises suffered default to go against them, and that, after the expiration of the fourth day, they could not contest the validity of the order of revivor. In our opinion that contention is unsound, for it is elementary that, before a judgment of any character, and especially one by default, will be permitted to stand, even in a collateral attack, there must be some kind of a statement filed in the court setting forth the facts constituting the cause of action, or a basis for the judgment or other relief sought, in order that the record will disclose the matters and things determined thereby. Section 756, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 739), provides that the court "may, on motion, order the action to be continued by or against the representative or successor of such party in interest." And section 640, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 660), provides that "All motions shall be accompanied by a written specification of the reasons upon which they are founded; and no reason not so specified shall be urged in support of the motion." "Revivor of actions being purely statutory in its origin, the modes provided by the Codes and statutes of the various states are exclusive, and the courts cannot grant such benefit by any other method." 18 Ency. of Plead. & Prac. p. 1128, par. 5. A failure to loc. cit. 591, 117 S. W. 730; Davis v. Jacksonville et al., 126 Mo. 69, 28 S. W. 965; Hoffman v. McCracken, 168 Mo., loc. cit. 343, 67 S. W. 878. Suppose, for instance, defendants had appeared in court in response to the summons, what would they have found there to answer? Absolutely nothing. No motion asking for a revivor of the cause in the name of the bank, nor a statement of any kind of the fact (if fact it was) that Wilson had transferred his interests in the subject-matter of the suit to the bank.

While it is no part of the record, counsel for respondents stated in open court during argument that whatever interest, if any, the bank had in the case was acquired by it long prior to the time when Wilson instituted this suit. This side remark of counsel throws much light upon the vague and indefinite disclosures made by the record as to the interests of the bank in the cause. In fact it is the only rational explanation that could be offered for the bank's desire to become a party to the suit. But however that may be, it has nothing to do with the proper disposition of the case. It must be determined according to the record, and not according to the statements of counsel. It was, however, material for defendant to know in whose name the suit was to be revived, in that of the heirs of Wilson, or in the name of the bank, for both were asserting that right; and, as there was nothing on file in the cause informing them of the nature of the bank's claim, they were wholly unable to resist its motion (if we may so call it) for an order of revivor. A distinction might, and probably should, be drawn where the heirs or personal representatives of a deceased plaintiff suggest the death for in that case the law casts the title and interests of the deceased in and to the subject-matter of the suit upon the heirs when it concerns real estate, and upon the executor or administrator when personalty is involved, thereby leaving no issue of fact to be determined regarding the claim of ownership of the property on that side of the case; but, where a perfect stranger to all of the parties, as the bank was in this case, asserts title to the property by virtue of a contract made and entered into with the deceased, good pleading and practice require that such claim should be formally presented to the court, the evidence heard, and a formal finding and order or decree made determining that question. Otherwise the courts are liable to be imposed upon, and the rightful owners of the property are liable to be defrauded out of their rights.

The reason for requiring the bank, a new plaintiff to make formal charge and proofs of ownership in this case is the same as that which requires the original or deceased neighbor without he first charges ownership or the right to the possession of the property claimed, except he files his petition in court setting forth the nature of his claims thereto, and notifies his neighbor to come into court and defend the same; and in addition thereto he must prove his claims by a preponderance of the evidence to the reasonable satisfaction of the court or jury; otherwise he would be taking property without due process of law. Doubtless this was the design of the Legislature in empowering the circuit courts, the triers of the facts, by section 764, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 743), to substitute the name of a transferee of a cause of action in lieu of the plaintiff bringing the suit, where the transfer had been made subsequent to the institution of the suit, in order that such transfer, when material, might be litigated along with the other facts of the case. That design is emphasized by the fact that the Legislature gave this court no such authority, knowing that it was not a trial court of original jurisdiction, and for that reason withheld from its consideration such matters. We are therefore of the opinion that said section 758 did not authorize the circuit court to make the order of revivor before set forth.

3. Nor is the bank relieved of the embarrassing situation in which it finds itself by anything contained in the practice act governing this court. There are but four sections of the statute bearing upon the question of revival of actions in this court, and they are sections 856-859, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 805, 806) inclusive, which read as follows:

"Sec. 856. Death of Party, When Suggested. If there be several appellants or plaintiffs in error, and one or more of them die before the cause is submitted, such death shall be suggested by the surviving plaintiffs, and if one or more of several defendants die before the cause is submitted, such death shall in like manner be suggested by the surviving defendants.

"Sec. 857. Appeal or Writ shall Not Abate upon Death of Party. If there be several appellants or plaintiffs in error, and one or more of them die after the cause is submitted, or if there be several appellants or defendants in error, one or more of whom shall die after the cause is submitted, the appeal or writ of error shall not thereby abate, but in either of such cases such death shall be suggested on the record, and the cause shall proceed at the suit of the surviving appellant or plaintiff in error, or against the surviving appellee or defendant in error, as the case may be.

"Sec. 858. Heirs and Legal Representatives, When Made Parties. If all the appellants or plaintiffs in error die after the appeal is taken, or writ of error is brought, and before judgment rendered thereon, the executors and administrators of the last surviving plaintiff or appellant or the heirs and devisees of the plaintiff and appellant, in cases where they would be entitled to bring writs of error, may be substituted for such plaintiffs, and the cause shall proceed at their suit.

"Sec. 859. When They shall Join in Error. If the appellees or a sole appellee, or if all the defendants or a sole defendant in a writ of error die, after the appeal taken or writ of error brought, and before judgment therein, the executors and administrators or heirs and devisees of such appellees or defendants may be compelled to become parties, and in like manner as in an original suit."

Manifestly the only one of those sections which could possibly apply to the facts of a case like this is section 858, for the reason that Frederick J. Wilson, the only appellant in the cause, died after the appeal was granted, and before a judgment had been rendered therein by this court. But that section only authorizes the suit to be revived in the names of the executors or administrators, or in the names of the heirs and devisees of the appellant, and does not authorize a substitution in the name of a stranger, who claims to have acquired the interest of the appellant in the subject-matter of the suit by contract, subsequent to the granting of the appeal. Not only that, but the grant of authority to this court to revive the cause in the names of the executors or administrators, or in the names of the heirs and devisees of the appellant, after appeal taken, and after the death of the appellant, excludes the idea that the suit may be revived in the name of any one else after the happening of those events, either in this court or in the circuit court. That was the contention of counsel for the company in the case of Crawford v. Railroad, supra. The writer had the honor of presiding over the circuit court which tried that cause, and concurred in the views of counsel to the extent that, literally speaking, after the appeal had been taken to this court, the circuit court had no jurisdiction to set aside the order granting the appeal and enter an order of revivor in the name of the administrator, etc., but it was of the opinion, and so held, that it was not the intention of the Legislature, by that section of the statute, to abolish the well-settled law of the state which authorized the trial court, during the term at which a judgment was rendered, to set the same aside, and to make such alterations and amendments thereto as right and justice should demand. So, acting under that well-settled law, the trial court set aside the order granting the appeal, and made an order reviving the cause in the name of the administrator, etc. On appeal to this court the action of the trial court was affirmed. But this court went further, and properly held that the circuit court would not have had that power and authority if the term of court at which the judgment was rendered had fully lapsed prior to the time the order of revivor was made. Crawford v. Railroad, 171 Mo., loc. cit. 75, 66 S. W. 350, and cases cited. In the case at bar the term had fully lapsed at the time when the circuit court made the order reviving the cause in the name of the bank. According to the case before cited that court had no power or authority to make the order, and we must therefore hold the order of the circuit court reviving the cause in the name of the Second National Bank of Jackson, Tennessee to be null and void.

This view deprives this court of all authority to investigate and pass upon the merits of the case.

We are of the opinion that the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered. All concur.

KOLOKAS v. MISSOURI PAC. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 1.
July 1, 1909. Rehearing Denied
Nov. 27, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 501*)—ABSTRACT—SUFFICIENCY.

Where the abstract of the bill of exceptions does not show any call for a motion to strike out part of the answer, and the bill does not show any exceptions to the court's ruling sustaining the motion, error assigned by defendant cannot be considered on appeal, under Laws 1903, p. 105 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 815), relating to practice in the Supreme Court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2301; Dec. Dig. § 501.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 263*)—RESERVATION OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW—FAILURE TO EXCEPT.

Where no exception was saved at the time of giving plaintiff's instructions, error therein cannot be considered on appeal.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 270*)—RESERVATION OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW—FAILURE TO EXCEPT.

An appellant must first not only seek and fail to get relief in the lower court, but must save an exception to the action of the court in refusing relief, before he is entitled to a review of error on appeal, and errors assigned to overruling motions in arrest and for a new trial cannot be considered if no exceptions were saved.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 664*)—RECORD—VERITY OF ABSTRACT.

For appellate purposes the abstract of record must be assumed to import verity; and, where the abstract of the bill of exceptions shows no exception to the overruling of motions for new trial and in arrest, in the bill, which was the only place in which it could be properly preserved, it will be assumed that no exception

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 586*)—ABSTRACT—SUFFICIENCY.

An abstract of record must not be constructed by commingling record entries and record proper with matter of mere exception in an undistinguishable mass, so that the appellate court is put to sorting out exceptions from record entries and record proper.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 554*)—REVIEW.

Where there is nothing for consideration on appeal but the record proper, and the petition states a good cause of action, and the judgment is in form, the judgment will be affirmed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jackson County; W. B. Teasdale, Judge.

Action by Helen Kolokas against the Missouri Pacific Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Martin L. Clardy and Elijah Robinson, for appellant. Wm. S. Gabriel and Conkling & Rea, for respondent.

LAMM, P. J. James Kolokas, a citizen of Greece, an employé of defendant as a track laborer at Goffs in the state of Kansas, received injuries on July 24, 1904, of which he died in the ensuing September at defendant's hospital in St. Louis. Helen, his wife, also a citizen of Greece and residing there, brought suit in the Jackson circuit court for damages for his wrongful death. From a judgment in her favor for $5,500 defendant appeals.

The petition charges that Kolokas was a track laborer for defendant under the supervision of defendant's foreman; that among other duties he helped operate a hand car on defendant's track. After pleading certain duties due from defendant to Kolokas, the petition charges a negligent breach of them, whereby Kolokas, standing upon an east-bound hand car, with his back to the east and having no knowledge of approaching danger, in rounding a curve came in sight of one of defendant's west-bound trains, and in undertaking to escape from alleged impending peril, was mortally hurt by jumping or falling from said hand car upon the track and being struck thereby. The elements of defendant's alleged negligence will sufficiently appear in the following excerpt: "Plaintiff states that the death of said Jim Kolokas was the direct result of the carelessness and negligence of said railway company in failing to furnish him with a reasonably safe place in and upon which to work and to operate said hand car; was the direct result of its carelessness and negligence in failing to keep and maintain said tracks in a reasonably safe condition for the passage of said hand car; was the direct result of the carelessness and negligence of defendant, its foreman, and vice principal, before operating said hand car over said tracks and while so doing, in failing to use reasonable care to ascertain the presence of trains thereon, and to avoid collision with the same; and was the direct result of the carelessness and negligence of defendant, its foreman, and vice principal, when directing the operation of said hand car, in failing to give reasonably safe and careful orders and directions for such operation—all in the particulars and respects stated."

Certain Kansas statutes (Gen. St. 1901) are pleaded, viz.:

"Sec. 4871. When the death of one is caused by the wrongful act or omission of another, the personal representatives of the former may maintain an action therefor against the latter, if the former might have maintained an action had he lived against the latter for an injury for the same act or omission. The action must be commenced within two years. The damages cannot exceed ten thousand dollars, and must inure to the exclusive benefit of the widow and children, if any, or next of kin, to be distributed in the same manner as personal property of the deceased.

"Sec. 4872. That in all cases where the residence of the party whose death has been or hereafter shall be caused as set forth in section 422 of chapter 80, Laws of 1893, is or has been at the time of his death in any other state or territory, or when, being a resident of this state, no personal representative is or has been appointed, the action provided in said section 422 may be brought by the widow, or where there is no widow, by the next of kin of such deceased."

The petition alleges that Helen is the widow of decedent, that decedent at the time of his death was a resident of Kansas, and that no personal representative had ever been appointed. The answer admits that Kolokas was a Greek laborer in defendant's employ, and was injured in an accident on June 24, 1904, but denies responsibility for said accident. It then pleads (1) contributory negligence; (2) that plaintiff cannot recover because she as well as her husband were aliens; (3) that if any cause laws of Kansas; that one of said laws provided that suits for damages on account of personal injury shall be instituted in the county where the injury occurred, or in the county where the principal office or place of business of the railroad company is located, and that defendant's principal office or place of business is not located in Jackson county, Mo., and (4) that a Kansas statute in force at the time of the accident ordains that every railroad company organized or doing business in that state shall be liable for all damages done to an employé in consequence of any negligence of its agents, or by reason of the mismanagement of the engineers or other employés, "to any person sustaining such damage, provided that notice in writing of the injury so sustained, stating the time and place thereof, shall have been given by or on behalf of the person injured to such railroad company within ninety days after the occurrence of the accident," and that no such notice was given. Plaintiff filed a motion to strike out that part of the answer pleading that decedent and plaintiff were aliens. This motion was sustained.

In due time after verdict defendant filed motions for a new trial and in arrest. These motions are preserved in the bill of exceptions, but there is no exception appearing in the abstract as saved in the bill to overruling either of them. On that behalf the record shows as follows: Under the general caption of "Appellant's Abstract of Record" appears, on page 10, among the record entries, and in that part of the abstract devoted to record proper, an abstract of an entry overruling both motions and in that connection the following: "And to the action of the court in overruling each of said motions defendant excepted." Subsequently, on page 12 of said abstract, we find the following: "The proceedings on the trial of the case, as shown by the bill of exceptions, were as follows." Immediately following that explanatory matter we find the following black-letter caption: "Bill of exceptions." Following this appropriate heading indicating the commencement of the bill of exceptions, we find an amendment to the petition, allowed over defendant's objection; an application for a continuance on account of such amendment overruled; plaintiff's evidence in chief; defendant's evidence; plaintiff's evidence in rebuttal; plaintiff's instructions; defendant's given instructions; defendant's refused instructions; defendant's modified instructions; the argument of Mr. Conkling to the jury on behalf of plaintiff, to portions of which objections were made. Following that are set forth a motion for a new trial and one in arrest. But, as said, there are no exceptions saved in the bill of exceptions to overruling either motion. Neither is the motion to strike out preserved in the bill of exceptions, nor in any call made in the bill for the motion to strike out. Neither are plaintiff's instructions.

Learned counsel rely on the following propositions to reverse: "(1) There was no evidence tending to show negligence on the part of defendant, or any of its employés, except of decedent himself. (2) Decedent's injuries are shown to be the result of accident, for which no one was at fault. (3) Error in admitting evidence showing no administration on the estate of James Kolokas in the city of St. Louis, and in permitting one Peter Kolokas to testify that there was no administration in the state of Kansas, and in permitting in evidence a certain letter written by one Golmis to defendant's claim agent. (4) Error in striking out the allegation in the answer that plaintiff and decedent were aliens. (5) Error in overruling defendant's objections to plaintiff's instructions 1 and 2, and in refusing defendant's instruction 7."

On such record, we observe:

(a) That the abstract of the bill of exceptions does not show any call for the motion to strike out, nor does the bill show any exception saved to the ruling thereon. In such condition of the record error assigned in that behalf is not here for consideration. Laws 1903, p. 105 (Ann. St. 1903, p. 815); Hendricks v. Calloway, 211 Mo., loc. cit. 556, 559, 111 S. W. 60.

(b) There was no exception saved at the time to the giving of plaintiff's instructions. Hence that assignment of error is not here for consideration.

(c) Again, whether the assignments of error considered in paragraphs "a" and "b," and all other assignments, are reviewable depends on whether an exception was properly saved to overruling the motions in arrest and for a new trial. This is so because the Supreme Court is a court of last (not first) resort on error. No litigant may with safety, nisi, fasten his eye solely above, and lighten his present trial gloom with a ray of hope of success on appeal if he neglect the steps leading up. An appellant must first, not only seek and fail to get relief below, but he must save an exception to the action of the court in refusing relief, before he is entitled to a review of error here. Attending to this phase of the case, we must assume the abstract imports verity for appellate purposes. We find according to the abstract that defendant's bill preserved no exception to the ruling on either motion. The abstract of the record entries and of the record proper does show an exception saved to overruling the motions, but it must be presumed it was not saved in the only place it could be preserved properly, to wit, in the bill. This, because the abstract of the bill was bound to show such exception if one had been taken and saved. In other words, this abstract is constructed on a plan steadily condemned. It has been ruled many times that an abstract should not be constructed by commingling record entries and record proper with matter of mere exception in an undistinguishable mass, so that the appellate court is put to picking and choosing, to sorting out exception from record entries and record proper—guess where it is to be found and authenticated, and run a hazard of guessing wrong.

In Reno v. Fitz Jarrel, 163 Mo., loc. cit. 413, 63 S. W. 808, it was ruled on the point that this court "is no place for conjectures." State v. Baty, 166 Mo. 561, 66 S. W. 423, was a case of murder in the first degree. The commingling of record entries with the bill of exceptions, so that matter of the one class could not be differentiated from matter of the other, led this court to affirm a sentence of 10 years in the penitentiary on a conviction of murder in the first degree. In that case it was ruled: "The evidence in this case cannot be looked into by reason of the fact that the bill of exceptions has not been properly identified; nothing in the transcript to show where it begins. There is nothing in the record proper which precedes and identifies what may be supposed to be the bill." In Clay v. Union Wholesale Publishing Co., 200 Mo., loc. cit. 872, 673, 98 S. W. 575, 577, Fox, J., speaking for the court, said: "If this is the bill of exceptions, then it is manifest that appellants have improperly confounded in such bill matters which pertain to the record proper with those which should only be embraced in the bill of exceptions preserving the exceptions to the action of the court during the progress of the trial."

* * * So far as this abstract discloses, there is nothing to distinguish the matters of record from those which are purely matters of exception, and can only be made a part of the record by filing a duly authenticated bill of exceptions." In Stark v. Zehnder, 204 Mo., loc. cit. 448 et seq., 102 S. W. 993, Valliant, J., speaking for this court, said: "Appellants have filed what they call 'Abstract in Lieu of Full Record,' in which is contained the pleadings, evidence, and several statements as of the rulings and proceedings of the court in the progress of the trial and subsequent thereto, but it is impossible to tell from this abstract whether the alleged rulings and orders of the court appear on the face of the court record proper, or are preserved only in the bill of exceptions. * * * The abstract should distinguish between what it intends to say is shown by the record proper and what it intends to say is shown by the bill of exceptions." In Gilchrist v. Bryant, 213 Mo., loc. cit. 443, 111 S. W. 1128, it was ruled: "Now it has always been held that an exception can be preserved for appellate use nowhere else than in a bill of exceptions. Therefore the bill of exceptions should show the exceptions. Therefore the abstract of the bill of exceptions should show that the bill of exceptions shows the exceptions."

The same propositions are asserted in one form or another in many other cases and the reason underlying them is manifest. The reports are full of interpretation and application of our rules of practice, and they should either be abrogated altogether, or obeyed as interpreted. Our decisions cannot be ignored, and prosperity result. So, as said through our Brother Graves, in Harding v. Bedoll, 202 Mo., loc. cit. 629, 100 S. W. 639: "These rules apply to all persons, all cases, and all representatives of clients alike, and must be construed in one case just as they have been or will be in another, irrespective of the case, the parties, or their counsel."

The premises considered, there is nothing here for consideration but the record proper. The petition states a good cause of action. The judgment is in form. It is therefore affirmed. All concur.

WILSON-REHEIS-ROLFES LUMBER CO. v. CAPRON et al.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 17, 1909.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 139*)—FORM OF CLAIM—DESCRIPTION OF MATERIALS.

The use of ordinary trade abbreviations in describing materials set out in a mechanic's lien account disclosing a demand for lumber and hardware satisfies the requirements of Rev. St. 1899, § 4207 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2290).

2. EVIDENCE (§ 457*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—MEANING OF ABBREVIATIONS.

The meaning of ordinary trade abbreviations as used in a mechanic's lien statement may be explained by parol.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Daniel G. Taylor, Judge.

Action by the Wilson-Reheis-Rolfes Lumber Company against James D. Capron, Jr., and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

H. E. Sprague, for appellants. Rudolph Schulenburg, for respondent.

GOODE, J. This action was instituted to enforce a mechanic's lien against property in the city of St. Louis. Plaintiff, a lumber company in said city, sold and furnished material to defendant Ware for the erection of dwelling houses on the premises in question, in which the other defendants are interested in one way or another. A single question is presented for decision—whether the description in the lien statement of the material furnished satisfied the statute. The lien account as filed in the office of the clerk of the circuit court declared the lienor, Wilson-Reheis-Rolfes Lumber Company, with a mechanics' liens, filed "the account below set forth for work and labor done, and lumber and millwork, hardware, and materials furnished by it under one contract with, and at the special instance and request of, W. M. Ware, upon, to and for the buildings and improvements described as follows," describing them and the lots whereon they stood, and stating the interest of the other defendants in the premises. After those matters had been set out, it was declared all the interests of the several owners of the property were subject to plaintiff's demand for a lien in the sum of $1,070.12. An itemized account then followed in the statement, and this account, which will be more particularly described, was followed by an affidavit that it was a just and true account for work and labor done and material furnished by plaintiff company for the building and improvements previously described after all just credits had been given. The sufficiency of the lien account is challenged because abbreviations of an unintelligible character are said to have been used in designating part of the materials set out in the items of the account, instead of names of the materials. Though the lien statement containing the itemized account said the lien was filed for work and labor done, lumber, millwork, hardware, and material furnished, it contains no item for work or labor, but all the items are for materials, consisting of lumber of various kinds and hardware. Every item of hardware mentions nails, describing them as "com. nails." That description is plain enough, and is not questioned. No other items are in the account except those of lumber of various dimensions or articles manufactured out of lumber. The latter are designated as "water table," "turned cols.," "wdw. frames," "hand & foot rail," etc. We do not understand any of those items is challenged. Several other items of lumber are fully named; for instance, "lath," shingles, described as "cedar shgls," "jambs," etc. The form of the items which are questioned will be sufficiently shown by this portion of the account, following a caption wherein plaintiff is described as "dealer in lumber, shingles, lath, pickets," etc.:

Feet.	Pieces.	Size.	Length.	Description.	Price.	Amount.
4267	200	2x8	16	# 1 Y. P. Jun. 19.07	24.00	108.48
1499		1x6		Y. P. Dr. Sdg. Jul. 3.07	31.00	46.47
500	100	1x6	10	Com. Dr. Sdg. " 8 "	31.00	15.50

These descriptions are criticised on the ground that the owners of the premises or other parties interested could not ascertain from them the kinds of materials furnished, as it is nowhere described as lumber. It is argued a person would not know whether or some other substance the name of which would have the initials "Y. P." The statute says a lien account shall be "a just and true account." Rev. St. 1899, § 4207 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2290). Later decisions regarding what will satisfy that requirement are more liberal than the early ones, as will appear upon reading the opinion in Mill Co. v. Allison, 138 Mo. 50, 40 S. W. 118, 60 Am. St. Rep. 544, wherein the earlier decisions are reviewed and in some degree discredited, the court saying the account the law contemplated was such a statement of claim as fairly apprises the owner and the public of the nature and amount of the demand asserted as a lien, and discloses on its face a demand of a sort within the terms of the lien law. The itemized account in the present case is to be read in connection with the statement preceding it and the affidavit following, and in both of those parts of the lien paper it was made clear that whatever materials were furnished according to the itemized account were of a character for which a lien was given, since both the preliminary statement and the affidavit said a lien was sought for work done, lumber, millwork, hardware, and materials furnished in and for the building. But it is insisted no one can tell from the items that lumber was furnished. We take issue with counsel for defendants on this proposition, and think any one of ordinary business experience, and much more one with slight experience in buying lumber, would know the trade abbreviations. Nearly every one would know the letters "Y. P." read in connection with the number of feet in the same line (4,267) and the number of pieces (200) and the dimensions (2x8x16) meant some sort of lumber; and the same may be said in regard to such items as "Y. P. Dr. Sdg." when read in connection with the descriptive numbers and the previous statement that a lien was sought for lumber and hardware. A lien account identical in form with the one under review was sustained in Schulenberg v. Werner, 6 Mo. App. 292. The itemized account is not fully set out in the opinion in that case, but we have examined it in the record on file, and there is no difference. Here, as there, some of the abbreviations so clearly mean lumber that the sense is obvious; for instance "cedar shgls" and "lath." If necessary, evidence aliunde may be resorted to on a trial to explain the meaning of such trade abbreviations. They have been held in other jurisdictions sufficient descriptions of materials in a lien paper. Wetmore v. Marsh, 81 Iowa, 677, 47 N. W. 1021; Great So. Hotel Co. v. Jones, 116 Fed. 793, 54 C. C. A. 165. In the first of those cases the itemized statement was far less clear and definite than is the one at bar, and in the second case, where the lien was for brick, the descriptions in the items were in this form: "749 Jack Arch;" "385 Plain Arch;" "9100

Standard 2nds." It was said a statement of account was not insufficient because trade terms and bookkeeper's abbreviations were used, and that no one reading the items in connection with the affidavit which accompanied them could fail to see they called for different kinds of brick.

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

WARREN v. MAYER FERTILIZER & JUNK CO.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 16, 1909.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 439*)—TRANSFER OF PROPERTY—POSITION OF PURCHASER.

While, as a general rule, the assets of a corporation are a trust fund for the benefit of its creditors, yet a corporation may dispose of the whole or any part of its assets for value and in good faith, and the purchaser takes such assets discharged of any trust in favor of the creditors of the selling corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1774; Dec. Dig. § 439.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 542*)—TRANSFER OF PROPERTY—CONSIDERATION—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to show that a corporation transferring its assets to another corporation did so in good faith and for an adequate consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2154-2160; Dec. Dig. § 542.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 547*)—TRANSFER OF PROPERTY—LIABILITY OF TRANSFEREE FOR CLAIM AGAINST TRANSFEROR.

The fact that the claim of a creditor of a corporation had not been liquidated, the case being pending in the Supreme Court, when the debtor corporation transferred its assets to another corporation, would not render the claim the less a lien on the assets in the hands of the other corporation if they were not transferred in good faith and for adequate consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 547.*]

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 445*)—RIGHT TO ASSEET LEGAL CLAIM.

Where a corporation undertook in good faith, and for an adequate consideration, to transfer all its assets to another corporation, but by mistake a city lot belonging to it was omitted from the conveyance of its real property, the equitable title to the lot passed to the transferee, and, in an equitable action by the creditor of the transferor against the transferee to subject the conveyed assets to satisfaction of the debt, the creditor could not assert a right, based upon the fact that the legal title had not been conveyed.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Wm. M. Kinsey, Judge.

Action by Thomas Warren against the Mayer Fertilizer & Junk Company. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

In 1895 the appellant, plaintiff below, had a transaction with a corporation, known as the "A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company," which resulted in the commencement by him of an action against it, in the circuit court of the city of St. Louis, on the 12th of April, 1897. At the first trial of that case, the judgment went for the defendant, being rendered October 21, 1897; but the plaintiff prosecuted an appeal to the Supreme Court, where the judgment was reversed, of date March 12, 1901 (161 Mo. 112, 61 S. W. 644). The case was again tried in the circuit court, and resulted in a judgment of date June 11, 1902, in favor of plaintiff here against the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company, for $765 and costs; the costs amounting to $157.55. At the beginning of the litigation against it, the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company was conducting an active business and had real and personal property, variously estimated at from $80,000 to $34,000. It was capitalized at $50,000, divided into 500 shares of $100 par, of which Fred. Mayer owned 100 shares, the estate of A. B. Mayer 200 shares, and the children of another one of the Mayer family, namely, Rosa, Henry, and Maurice, the remaining 200 shares. The officers and directors of the company were Frederick, Henry, and Maurice Mayer. After the first trial of the case in the circuit court, in which the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company was successful, but subsequent to the appeal of the case to the Supreme Court, and before the reversal of the judgment of the circuit court by the Supreme Court, the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company, under date of February 9, 1901, entered into a contract with "Henry Mayer or Maurice Mayer," the contract being evidenced by the record of the meeting of the directors of the company, held February 9th, at which all the directors were present, namely, Frederick, Henry, and Maurice Mayer, in which resolution it is set out: "That Frederick Mayer reported that the condition of the company at present was such that they could not continue in business with any expectation of earning and paying off sufficient to discharge the two larger claims of Rosa Mayer and Abram B. Mayer, appearing on the company's books as debts, although said claims really originated from the declaration of dividends which the company never had the means to pay; that, if an option were given to Henry or Maurice Mayer to sell all the assets of this company to a new corporation to be formed, such new corporation would assume all of the secured and merchandise debts of this company, except such claims of Rosa Mayer and A. B. Mayer, deceased, and except outside claims, and would pay or secure to this company the further sum of $12,000, which could then be applied to the past debts of this company." A resolution was thereupon adopted by the board of directors "to authorize the said Henry or Maurice Mayer to negotiate a sale of all the assets of this corporation upon the terms aforesaid, and $12,000 in cash or good notes, and upon their furnishing an agreement of a solvent party or corporation to assume the obligations of this company hereinbefore mentioned, the president and secretary be, and they hereby are, instructed to transfer and convey to said company or corporation all the assets, brands, and good will of this company, and that said sum of $12,000 be turned over, as received to the executors of the estate of A. B. Mayer, deceased, on account of his said claim against this company; it being considered that the said claim of Rosa Mayer against the same has become barred by limitation."

Prior to this date, February 9, 1901—that is to say, January 23, 1901—the first meeting of the stockholders of the defendant, Mayer Fertilizer & Junk Company, was held, all of the stockholders being present, to wit, Frederick Mayer, Sam. S. Pingree, and Harry Haas. Frederick Mayer was elected chairman, and Mr. Pingree secretary. It is then recited, in the minutes of the meeting, from which minutes the subsequent recitals of acts of the company are obtained, that, "negotiations for the purchase of an established business in the city of St. Louis having not yet been sufficiently completed," the meeting adjourned to reconvene February 2d. On February 2d the adjourned meeting was held, "all the stockholders being present as before," whereupon Mr. Haas offered the following resolution: "Resolved that, whereas, negotiations have been opened between our stockholders and parties having an option upon the property of the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company, for the purchase of its entire plant and properties upon the assumption of certain merchandise debts owing by said company and of its line of credit in the German-American Bank of this city, as well as a certain amount of cash and notes, that the following offer be made by the stockholders of this company, to wit."

The proposition is to the effect that the new company, defendant in this case, proposes to purchase from those parties all of the real estate of the company situated in St. Louis, "subject to existing company's indebtedness," also all its machinery, franchises, choses in action, "and all other personal property belonging to said A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company, in consideration whereof this company shall assume the merchandise indebtedness of said A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company, as contained upon its books, as well as all commercial paper upon which the same are liable, whether held in bank or by individuals, all of which indebtedness is estimated to be about $24,000, but not including any claims in suit or in controversy, nor the claims

A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company, and this company proposes to surrender to said parties of the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company the sum of $2,958.83 in cash, and the further sum of $9,041.17, in the negotiable promissory notes of this company, indorsed by Frederick Mayer and his two brothers, payable in semiannual installments during a period of seven years from date, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from date, also payable semiannually, divided into 11 sets of 11 notes each, and described as follows." The resolution then enumerates the notes, and continues: "And that upon the proper transfer duly authorized of said assets, the president of this company, together with the secretary, be authorized to fully complete the terms of the aforesaid proposition." It was further resolved that the president and secretary of the company issue to each of the subscribers to the stock of the company, or their assigns, the amount of stock respectively subscribed by them upon their so turning over all of said assets, brands, and good will of said A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company, "which shall be taken as full payment therefor. Provided said stockholders shall pay said cash or perfectly secure the payment of said promissory notes hereinbefore fully described." The meeting then adjourned until the 16th of February, 1901, and on that date, all the stockholders being present, it is recited that the president, Frederick Mayer, reported that the proposition made to the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company for their property, etc., had been accepted, and that the conveyances of the property were being prepared. On the same day the directors met and organized, Mr. Pingree resigning as director, and, Mr. Henry Mayer being elected to succeed him, whereupon the board proceeded to the election of officers, and Frederick Mayer was elected president and treasurer, Henry Mayer vice president, and Harry Haas secretary.

On the 10th of March, 1901, a special meeting of the directors of the defendant company was held, at which Mr. Haas presented his resignation as director, and Mr. Maurice Mayer was elected to succeed him as a director, and Mr. Henry Mayer elected to succeed him as secretary, and Maurice Mayer was elected vice president. A resolution was also adopted, to the effect that the president is authorized to execute a deed of trust upon the real estate of the company to secure the German-American Bank in St. Louis, or its assigns, the redemption of a loan or loans in the sum of not exceeding $20,000. After all these proceedings had taken place, as before stated, and a deed, etc., had passed between the parties, the judgment of the circuit court in favor of the A.

having been successful in defeating the claim of plaintiff in the circuit court, the attorney and directors of the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company gave no thought to it as a possible liability. On the 25th of July, 1902, the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company filed in the office of the Secretary of State an affidavit of dissolution and surrendered its charter. It also appears that the deed from the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company to the defendant in this case, of date March 1, 1901, omitted the description of a certain parcel of real estate known as lot 7, in block 14, of Lowell, city block 3,381, of the city of St. Louis, which the company then owned, and that, at the time of the rendition of the judgment in favor of plaintiff and against the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company, the legal title to this lot was in the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company, and so remained until December 24, 1904, when the three Mayers, as the last board of directors of the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company, executed a conveyance of this lot to this defendant, which conveyance was duly of record; it being claimed that the omission of this lot from the conveyance of March 1, 1901, was a mere clerical error. It also appears that Henry Haas, one of the original incorporators of the defendant, had paid nothing for his stock, having subscribed for it at the request and for the accommodation of Frederick Mayer, and that he had subsequently transferred it to Maurice Mayer, who paid him nothing for it; and Mr. Haas further testified that, while he was present at the first and second meetings of the incorporators and directors, he had taken no part in the negotiations for the assets of the old concern. Mr. Pingree also testified: That while he had subscribed for 60 shares of the stock of the new company, the present defendant, he had done so at the request of Frederick Mayer, but had paid nothing for it, and had subsequently transferred it to one of the Mayers, who had paid him nothing for the transfer; that, while he attended two or three meetings of the company and acted as secretary, he had taken no part in the negotiations for the purchase of the assets of the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company.

It also appears that the notes which the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company had received as part of the consideration from the defendant, and which had been executed by the defendant and indorsed by Frederick, Henry, and Maurice Mayer, as well as a certain amount of cash, were turned over to the attorney of Mrs. A. B. Mayer and her children; that attorney having been a very active factor in procuring the adjustment of the claim of the executors and estate of A.

that something could be saved for the widow, Mrs. Mary Mayer, and her minor children, and the claim of Rosa Mayer having been eliminated as worthless. The stock held by the A. B. Mayer estate was turned over, in exchange for the notes and some cash, to Mr. Muench, who had represented the old company for many years and afterwards represented Frederick Mayer in this transaction. It further appears that Frederick Mayer was for many years the active head of the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company, owning, however, but 100 shares of the 500 shares of that concern, and on the death of his father, A. B. Mayer, the whole management and responsibility for the business had been thrown upon him. His unwillingness to carry on the concern under those circumstances appears to have been a very strong motive leading to the organization of the new company and its purchase of the assets and business of the old company, and it also appears that he went into the matter of taking over the business of the old company only after considerable persuasion.

Among the liabilities of the old company was one to the German-American Bank, secured by a blanket mortgage on all of the assets of the concern, being used as collateral to cover whatever the old concern from time to time owed that bank. At the time of the transfer from one company to the other, the indebtedness to the bank amounted to something like $19,000 or $20,000, which was the limit of the company's credit with that bank, and the bank had threatened to take steps to protect its interest if the amount of indebtedness was not reduced.

While this is a very brief summary of the facts as set out in a rather voluminous abstract, we think it sufficient to give a correct idea of the facts so far as necessary to an understanding of the issues involved in the case. Plaintiff, after the recovery of his judgment, being unable to find any property upon which to levy execution, and considering that, by reason of the dissolution of the old company, he could not run execution against the lot, which had been omitted in the deed from the old to the new company, commenced this proceeding against the defendant. The petition in the case set out the facts as plaintiff claimed them to be, and substantially as above, and prayed that an accounting be taken of the assets received by the defendant from the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company, their value determined, the amount due on the judgment computed to date of decree, and, in default of payment, the property so received by the respondent sold for the satisfaction of the amount which might be found to be due on the judgment and for general relief; the petition averring that the transfer from the old to the new company was a mere merger of the business of the one into that of the other, and the transfer of the assets from one to the other made without the defendant company paying any valuable consideration therefor, and averring that the assets and property of the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company were, at the time they passed into the hands of the defendant company, a trust fund for the payment of all the debts and liabilities of the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company, and, when received and taken by defendant, were charged with such liability, and the plaintiff avers "that defendant has appropriated to its own use said assets and property of the value aforesaid, to wit, $100,000."

The answer of the defendant admits its incorporation at the time alleged, admits the incorporation of the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company and its dissolution under the law, and for affirmative defense avers there is a want of proper parties defendant in the cause, inasmuch as it appears from the allegations of the petition that there could not be a final decree entered in behalf of plaintiff without joining therein as defendants "the remaining trustees and directors of the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company." As another affirmative defense, the answers avers: That, "at the time when the defendant corporation was organized, to wit, about the 1st of February, 1901, and at the time when plaintiff had not any claim against the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company, but, on the contrary, the manufacturing company had judgment against plaintiff herein," the defendant did, in good faith, and for ample and valuable consideration, acquire by purchase all the assets of A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company; that the defendant company had acquired by purchase all the assets, real and personal, of the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company; that defendant had immediately rendered the consideration agreed upon and took over and received possession of all the assets, real and personal, theretofore belonging to the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company; but that, by an error of the scrivener, by whom the deed for the real estate was prepared, the lot in block 3,381, of the city of St. Louis, was omitted from the conveyance, although intended to be included therein, and although possession thereof was duly delivered to the defendant at the time the consideration passed and on that consideration; and that thereafter in December, 1904, when the error was first discovered, the old company made a deed correcting the omission and conveying to defendant the legal title to the lot in addition to the equitable title, which it had theretofore held thereto. The reply to this was a general denial.

The evidence developed the facts substantially as above set out. At the conclusion of the hearing, the court entered an order dismissing the plaintiff's bill, at the time filing a memorandum, which so clearly and fully sets out the conclusions, both on the law and the facts, arrived at by the learned trial judge, that we incorporate them herewith. It is as follows:

"The law governing a case of this character presents no special difficulty. While it is true, in a general way, that the assets of a corporation constitute a trust fund for the benefit of creditors of such corporation, it is equally true that a corporation has the power to dispose of the whole or any part of its assets for value, and in good faith, and that a purchaser takes such assets discharged of any trust in favor of the creditors of the selling corporation. The sole question in this case therefore is whether the transaction whereby the defendant acquired the assets of the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company was for value and in good faith, or whether, as contended by the plaintiff, the transaction amounted to the mere taking over by one corporation of the assets of another, in bad faith and without consideration, and without any provision being made for the payment of the creditors of the latter. This is a question of fact to be determined from the evidence in the case. The undisputed evidence shows that the defendant paid in money and in notes to the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company the sum of $12,000, and also assumed the payment of all the commercial debts of the latter company, including an indebtedness of something like $18,000 to $20,000 to the German-American Bank. The amount thus paid and assumed aggregated something over $34,000. One of the questions in this case is whether that sum was a fairly adequate price for the assets thus purchased. Fortunately for the defendant and those actively interested in its incorporation, they were dealing with adverse and opposing interests in making this purchase. The stockholders and creditors of the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company, represented by Mr. Arnstein, were insistent upon obtaining as large a sum as could possibly be realized for the assets of the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company, and it is impossible to draw any other conclusion from the evidence but that the aggregate of the sum paid and the debt assumed was as large a price as the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company could then have reasonably expected to obtain for its assets. It is true that the opinion evidence offered in the case by the plaintiff tends to show that the value of the assets of the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company far exceeded that placed upon them in the transaction whereby they were sold to the defendant. The opinion evidence offered by the defendant on the same question reduces the valuation near to that for which they were sold. Upon all the evidence offered on that question, especially in view of the difficulties which impeded the continuation of the business of the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company, the court is compelled to hold that the transfer was made for an adequate and reasonable consideration. There is no fact upon which to contest the good faith of the transaction except the pending claim of the plaintiff against the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company for some $700 or $800. Suit had been commenced upon this claim long prior to the sale. A judgment had been entered in favor of the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company and against the plaintiff upon his claim. The case was then pending on appeal in the Supreme Court, and was undetermined. On March 1, 1901, the transaction by which the defendant acquired the assets of the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company was fully executed. On March 12th following, the judgment in favor of the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company was reversed and remanded for a new trial. This, according to the testimony of Judge Muench, was an unexpected result, and it is obvious from all the testimony in this case that the purchase by the defendant of the assets of the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company was not intended to hinder or delay the collection of any claim which the plaintiff might then have had against the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company, and that the transaction was wholly in good faith. It results therefore that the plaintiff's bill must be dismissed.

"In addition to the foregoing observations, it is plainly shown by the evidence in this case that the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company acquired in this transaction clear assets in money and notes, equal to the sum of $12,000, which were subject to the claim of the plaintiff in the hands of that corporation, and were, of course, amply sufficient to pay any claim that he might establish thereafter against them. The fact that the officers and directors of the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company distributed those assets after thus acquiring them without making any provision for the payment of the plaintiff's claim affords no reason for holding the defendant liable therefor, but, on the contrary, conclusively shows that the debtor corporation had sufficient assets with which to pay the claim of plaintiff, and all other claims, for that matter, and it was an easy matter for the plaintiff to have pursued those assets in the hands of the stockholders of the A. B. Mayer Manufacturing Company, and to have thus secured payment of his judgment."

Geo. B. Webster, for appellant. Walther & Muench, for respondent.

REYNOLDS, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). The finding of fact and the statement of the law applicable to the case is so thoroughly in harmony with our views that we do not think it necessary to enlarge upon it. The very learned and industrious counsel for appellant relies very strongly upon the cases of Bertholdt v. Holladay-Klotz Land & Lumber Co., 91 Mo. App. 233; Grenell v. Detroit Gas Co., 112 Mich. 70, 70 N. W. 413; Jones v. Arkansas Mech. & Ag. Co., 38 Ark. 17; Arnholz v. Hartwig, 73 Mo. 483; State ex rel. Peirce v. Merritt, 70 Mo. 275; and Chattanooga, R. & C. R. Co. v. Evans, 66 Fed. 809, 14 C. C. 116—as well as many other cases in line with these referred to. We cannot agree that the facts in this case come within the principles of those decisions. To the contrary, we think that this case falls within the doctrine laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States in Fogg v. Blair, 133 U. S. 534, 10 Sup. Ct. 338, 33 L. Ed. 721, and Hollins v. Brierfield Coal & Iron Co., 150 U. S. 385, 14 Sup. Ct. 127, 37 L. Ed. 1113, and with the Missouri case of Hageman v. Railroad, 202 Mo. 249, 100 S. W. 1081, and cases there cited, as well as the decisions of this court in Barrie v. United Railways, 125 Mo. App. 96, 102 S. W. 1078, and Barrie v. United Railways (App.) 119 S. W. 1020. We think that the decision of the Supreme Court in the Hageman Case governs and controls in the determination and decision of this case, in so far that in many respects it is closely analogous. The new company, defendant here, paid adequate, and the testimony tends to show full, consideration for the assets which it had received and took over. The purchase price went into the hands of the stockholders of the old company. If there was any fraud upon creditors, it was in the distribution of these assets among the stockholders of the old company. Neither they nor the representatives of the old company are before this court in this proceeding, and, as to whether there is any liability under the facts in the case as to them, we express no opinion whatever. So far as the defendant corporation is concerned, on all the facts in the case—and we have read this record with reasonable care—there is neither fraud in fact, fraudulent intent, or constructive fraud shown or proven which entitles the plaintiff to recover against it. We are not to be understood as holding that the fact that plaintiff's claim, then pending on appeal in the Supreme Court, was not a lien because unliquidated. On this proposition we adhere to what we have said in the Holladay-Klotz and Barrie Cases, supra. The distinction lies in the fact that in the case at bar there is no evidence whatever tending to show that the transaction here involved was carried out with any intention to defraud any creditors.

As to the proposition made by counsel for appellant in his brief that this court should at least reverse so far as concerns the lot in city block No. 3,381, it is beyond controversy that the equitable title to that lot passed to the defendant. This is a proceeding in equity, and it will not do for plaintiff, coming into a court of equity, to endeavor to assert a bare, naked legal obligation

CITY OF DE SOTO v. HUNTER.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals, Missouri. Nov. 16, 1909. Concurring Opinion Nov. 30, 1909.)

1. BREACH OF THE PEACE (§ 1*)—VIOLATION OF ORDINANCE—NATURE OF OFFENSE.

An ordinance making it an offense to "willfully disturb the peace of any person" is violated by disturbing the peace of a policeman by the use of loud, offensive, and indecent language toward him, in the presence of others, on a public street, sufficient to inspire fear or terror, and arouse the passions, or destroy repose of mind.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Breach of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 1-3; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

2. BREACH OF THE PEACE (§ 10*)—VIOLATION OF ORDINANCE—QUESTIONS FOR THE JURY.

In a prosecution for violation of an ordinance, making it an offense to "willfully disturb the peace of any person," whether the peace of any person was disturbed is a question for the jury, and testimony of witnesses that accused used, in their presence, language which was loud, offensive, and indecent, but that their peace of mind was not disturbed thereby, does not warrant the court in directing a verdict for accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Breach of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 8; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

3. BREACH OF THE PEACE (§ 10*)—VIOLATION OF ORDINANCE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence in a prosecution for breach of the peace in violation of a municipal ordinance held sufficient to take the case to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Breach of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 8; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County; Jos. J. Williams, Judge.

Carlyle Hunter was prosecuted for disturbing the peace under a city ordinance. The court directed a verdict of acquittal, and the city appeals. Reversed and remanded.

James G. Berkley, for appellant. Byrns & Bean, for respondent.

NORTONI, J. This is a prosecution for a disturbance of the peace under a city ordinance. At the conclusion of the testimony on the part of the city, the court peremptorily directed a verdict of acquittal, and the city prosecutes the appeal. The material portion of the ordinance in evidence, a violation of which is alleged against the defendant, is as follows: "Whoever shall, in this city, willfully disturb the peace of any person or persons by violent, offensive, tumultuous or obstreperous conduct or carriage, or by loud or unusual noises, or shall use toward another any indecent, profane, obscene or offensive language calculated to provoke a breach of the peace, * * * so that others are dis-did, first, unlawfully and wrongfully and willfully disturb the peace of Robert Lanham, Eddie Eichelberger, Willie Burrus, Raymond Eichelberger, and the public generally by loud and unusual noises, by violent, tumultuous and obstreperous conduct and carriage; and second, by using to and toward others, whose names are to the affiant unknown, profane, offensive, and obscene language calculated to provoke a breach of the peace, etc. The testimony introduced on the part of the city to sustain the charges referred to is to the effect that the defendant was scuffling with some other boys on a public street and principal thoroughfare of the city of De Soto, and for some reason commenced talking loud and profane. The police officer, Robert Lanham, testified that he heard him more than a block away. Other witnesses gave testimony to the effect that they heard his profanity across the street. Some testimony goes to show that the defendant was cursing the Eichelberger boy with whom he had been scuffling, and other testimony goes to show that he was cursing some person spoken of in the testimony as an umbrella man. However, the umbrella man was not identified, nor was he a witness in the case. We gather from the testimony that he was possibly a traveling vendor or mender of these articles. The police officer, Lanham, upon hearing the profane discourse a block away, was attracted thereto, and came towards the defendant. Of the defendant's conduct and touching what he said, the police officer testified as follows: "He called me a G—d d—d s—n of a b—, and a G—d d—d b—, and was talking all kinds of names like that up there before I went up there. Q. When you got there what kind of language was he using? A. The first I heard was he was calling somebody a s—n of a b—." The police officer further testified that he heard the defendant using vile language towards the umbrella man referred to; the question and answer touching the matter being as follows: "Q. You heard him using this vile language while he was talking to this umbrella man? A. Yes, sir." The police officer was asked if the defendant's conduct and vile language disturbed his peace, and he answered that it did. While all of the evidence on the part of the city tended to prove that the defendant cursed and swore for a considerable period of time on the public street, some of it is to the effect that he was not cursing anybody particularly. One witness said: "I don't suppose he was cursing anybody particularly unless it was the Eichelberger boy. They had been scuffling." The question was directed by the court to all of the witnesses as to whether or not the de-defendant's cursing and swearing disturbed their peace. Each witness, other than the police officer, answered in the negative, saying that his peace was not disturbed thereby. The police officer, however, said that his peace was disturbed.

From the arguments appearing in the briefs we gather that the court directed a verdict for the defendant on the theory that as all of the witnesses for the city, other than the police officer, said their peace was not disturbed by the defendant's conduct, the city failed to make out a case. The argument advanced in support of the judgment is that the police officer who testified his peace was disturbed was not within the protection of the ordinance. To quote from the defendant's brief, it is said that "the police officer was acting within the scope of his official duties, and as such an official was not a person within the meaning of the ordinance. His personality was merged into that of his office as marshal." Indeed, the case of Salem v. Coffey, 113 Mo. App. 675, 88 S. W. 772, 93 S. W. 281, is cited in support of the doctrine referred to. That case was decided by the Kansas City Court of Appeals, Judge Ellison dissenting, a majority of the court holding that the peace of a police officer is not protected by the statute or an ordinance as the one now in judgment. According to the reasoning of that case, it is no offense for a citizen to call a police officer "a G—d d—d s—n of a b—," and otherwise abuse and vilify him. We are not persuaded thereby, but, on the contrary, believe that a police officer is within the protection of the statute as are other citizens of the state or city. We believe loud, offensive, and indecent language and epithets directed toward a policeman in the presence of others on the public street of a city or town sufficient to inspire fear or terror and arouse the passions or destroy the equanimity and repose of the mind of the person abused will amount to a disturbance of the peace of that person, and evidence tending to prove such facts is certainly sufficient to make a prima facie case for the jury touching that question. Be this as it may, we are not persuaded that the mere fact that all of the witnesses other than the police officer said their peace was not disturbed was sufficient to authorize the court to direct a verdict for the defendant on the evidence to be found in this record. In the city of St. Charles v. Meyer, 58 Mo. 86, the defendant was charged with having disturbed the peace, and the Supreme Court held that it was competent to introduce evidence on the part of the defendant to show that the noises made by the charivari party of which the defendants were members were slight, and not sufficient to disturb the public peace. The court said the tendency of this evidence "was to weaken the force of the plaintiff's evidence showing the offensive character of the noises and their adaptability for a disturbance of the public repose." However, in that opinion it is said that if the object of such testimony was "to show by way of special defense that the persons testifying were not individually disturbed by the noises complained of, such an object alone would be manifestly illegitimate."

From a careful reading of the case, we deduce the proposition that testimony to the effect that the language or conduct of the defendant actually disturbed the peace of any person or persons is not essential, as this is the real gravamen of the charge, and the question for the jury to determine on all the facts and circumstances in proof. Indeed, in Salem v. Coffey, 113 Mo. App. 675, 88 S. W. 772, 93 S. W. 281, the Kansas City Court of Appeals declared such testimony to be incompetent, saying that whether or not a person's peace is disturbed is the gravamen of the charge, and is therefore a question for the jury to determine. It is not necessary in this case to say that such testimony is incompetent. And the question is not decided. However, we entertain no doubt upon the proposition that it is not essential in a case where the language and conduct of the defendant is such as is shown by this record for the witnesses to testify positively that their peace was actually disturbed thereby. The facts in proof are certainly sufficient for the jury. A disturbance of the peace being the gravamen of the charge, whether the defendant's conduct was calculated to disturb and did disturb the peace of persons there assembled is for the jury to say. Keller v. State, 25 Tex. App. 325, 8 S. W. 275; McCandless v. State, 21 Tex. App. 411, 2 S. W. 811; People v. Murray, 54 Hun, 406, 7 N. Y. Supp. 548. One paragraph of the complaint charges the defendant with violent, tumultuous, and obnoxious conduct and carriage by using to and toward others, whose names are to the affiant unknown, profane, offensive, and obscene language calculated to provoke a breach of the peace. Now, this charge falls within the language of the ordinance, for it is made punishable thereby to use such language towards another as is calculated to provoke a breach of the peace. This charge possibly contemplates the conduct of the defendant towards the umbrella man referred to in the testimony. It appears from the record that no one knew who this umbrella man was, but that there was a man present denominated by the witnesses as an umbrella man is beyond question, if the testimony is to be believed, and it appears from the testimony of the police officer that part of the vile and offensive language spoken was directed by the defendant to this unknown person. It is obvious that the language such as detailed by the witnesses this defendant used towards this unknown umbrella man was calculated to disturb the peace of a person whether it did disturb his peace or not, and that question should certainly have been referred to the jury. It was for the jury to answer whether or not such language used toward the police officer, were calculated to disturb the peace of a person, even though he be a police officer and accustomed to more or less unkind remarks from boisterous individuals.

The judgment will be reversed and the cause remanded.

GOODE, J., concurs.

REYNOLDS, P. J. I concur in reversal, but do not concur in holding that it is not necessary in this case to say that the testimony of witnesses, who were permitted to answer the direct question of whether their peace had been disturbed by the profanely vulgar language attributed to the defendant, and who, in answer to this, said it had not, was incompetent. I have no doubt whatever on that; and think we owe it to the trial court, and to the defendant even, to pass on it and so prevent a possible further appeal. I have no hesitancy in saying that such a question was improper in this case, and that the testimony sought to be and which was elicited by it called for conclusions by the witnesses on the very fact the jury was to find, and it was therefore incompetent.

Nor am I willing, by silence, to give any support to the idea, advanced in cases referred to in the opinion, that a policeman or constable is by his office so far removed from citizenship as not to be within "the peace of the state." I see no more reason for applying that rule to him than to a judge, as was done by the Supreme Court of the United States in the great case of In re Neagle, 135 U. S. 1, 10 Sup. Ct. 658, 34 L. Ed. 55. A policeman is as much an officer as a judge or justice, and as much entitled to the protection of the laws of the land. Public officers are public servants, it is true, but they are none the less citizens and entitled to the same protection as is every citizen in the enjoyment of every right, one of the most important and dearest of which is the right to be within "the peace of the state," which here means the protection of its laws as against the vulgarity and profanity of public nuisances.

HAWMAN v. McLEAN et al.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 15, 1909. Rehearing Denied Dec. 6, 1909.)

1. NEW TRIAL (§ 41*)—GROUNDS—ADMISSION OF IMPROPER EVIDENCE.

A trial court may very properly grant a new trial because of the admission of improper evidence, though it attempted to withdraw the evidence by an instruction.

3. FRAUD (§ 59*) — DECEIT — EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

Where plaintiff claimed that she was deceived in an exchange of certain property for land in Arkansas, the measure of her damages was the difference between the actual value of the land in Arkansas at the time of the exchange, and what would have been its value if it had been as represented, and hence it was error to authorize the jury to allow the difference in the value the parties put on the land in Arkansas, at the time of the exchange, and its actual value.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. §§ 60-62; Dec. Dig. § 59.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Buchanan County; C. A. Mosman, Judge.

Action by Sarah Hawman against John H. McLean and others. From an order granting defendants a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

James W. Boyd, K. D. Cross, and Wm. H. Sherman, for appellant. Grant S. Watkins, Chas. H. Booher, and Chas. F. Strop, for respondents.

ELLISON, J. Plaintiff's action is for fraud and deceit. She recovered judgment in the trial court. A new trial was granted, and plaintiff appealed from that order.

It appears that plaintiff owned lands in Andrew county, which she exchanged for lands owned by defendants in Arkansas, and that plaintiff then exchanged the Arkansas land for real estate in the city of St. Joseph, Mo. Plaintiff alleges: That defendants induced her to make the exchange for the Arkansas land by their false and fraudulent representations of its value, its productive qualities, and the improvements thereon—matters she did not know and could not know about, and concerning which she relied upon the representations made by defendants as being true. That the representations were made to her for the purpose of deceiving and defrauding her.

It seems that plaintiff's exchange of the Arkansas land to third parties for the St. Joseph property was unfortunate, and that the result was she realized practically nothing from it. At the trial plaintiff testified in her own behalf, over the objection of defendants, as to the poor and disastrous results of her exchange for the St. Joseph property. The court gave two instructions withdrawing such evidence from the consideration of the jury; but when it came to consider the motion for new trial the court, in its discretion, concluded that injury had been done by allowing such evidence to be heard which could not be cured by withdrawing it, and therefore sustained the motion for the reason that such evidence had been heard. We think a trial court can very properly grant a new trial, in some circumstances, on the ground of having allowed improper evidence, though it does attempt to withdraw such evidence by instruction. The court, in many instances, could well conclude that material injury had been done, the influence of which could not be neutralized by an instruction; but plaintiff insists that defendants themselves first called out such improper evidence in their cross-examination of plaintiff, and that her offense, if it be one, was committed in redirect examination by way of a response, in some degree, to defendants having led the way. The record does, to some extent, bear plaintiff out; yet, on account of what follows, we need not say whether the court abused the discretion which we must allow it in the matter of granting new trials. It is a fully recognized rule that, though a reason assigned for granting a new trial be not justified by the record, if any other good cause is made by the motion, the order will be sustained on appeal. Hewitt v. Steele, 118 Mo. 463, 474, 24 S. W. 440; Bank v. Wood, 124 Mo. 72, 27 S. W. 554; Millar v. Car Co., 130 Mo. 517, 31 S. W. 574.

In this case the measure of plaintiff's damage was the difference between the actual value of the Arkansas land at the time of the exchange, and what would have been its value if it had been as represented. Bank v. Byers, 139 Mo. 627, 659, 41 S. W. 325; Caldwell v. Henry, 76 Mo. 254, 257; Hitchcock v. Baughan, 36 Mo. App. 216, 224. But an instruction was given for plaintiff which authorized the jury to allow as damage the difference between the value which the parties put upon the Arkansas land when the exchange was made, and its actual value. This would allow the jury to take, as basis of plaintiff's damage, the value she and defendants agreed was the value; when her damage could not be more than her loss, and her loss, of course, should be measured by the value of the thing lost—that is to say, the land. Plaintiff undertakes to point out that defendants did not object to that instruction. We have examined the record and find they did. The instruction was No. 2, for plaintiff, and it was modified by the court. Plaintiff objected, and then followed defendants' objection and exception. Plaintiff states the objection and exception was taken to the instruction as originally offered. That cannot be, for as originally offered it was not given, and defendants could not have had any ground for exception. Defendants' exception was to the giving of instruction No. 2, and the only instruction No. 2 given for plaintiff was the modified one. The record leaves no question as to defendants making the exception to the instruction given.

The order granting the new trial is affirmed. All concur.

STELTEMEIER v. BARRETT.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 16, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 969*) — DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—CONDUCT OF TRIAL.

The trial court has much latitude in directing the conduct of the trial, and, when the whole record shows that he endeavored to fairly conduct the trial and keep counsel within proper bounds, his discretion will not be interfered with on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3845-3848; Dec. Dig. § 969.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 29*) — CONDUCT OF TRIAL — REMARKS OF JUDGE—PROTECTING WITNESSES.

It is the trial court's duty to protect witnesses on examination, and, where counsel offered a part of the testimony of a witness on a former trial to show contradictions of his testimony at the present trial, it was not error for the trial judge to remark that counsel should have treated the witness fairly by reading the alleged contradictory statement to him, and asking him if he made it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 80-84; Dec. Dig. § 29.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 143*)—MATERIALITY.

In an action on a note in which defendant relied on receipts given for payments, the exclusion of a letter from defendant's counsel to plaintiff's counsel as to an inspection of the receipts was proper; the receipts being in evidence and subject to examination in court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 424, 426-428; Dec. Dig. § 143.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 211*)—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action by an administrator on a note, a requested instruction that, as defendant could not testify to any transaction with decedent showing payment, his failure to explain any matter connected with its payment should not be considered against him, was properly refused as prejudicing the plaintiff for exercising a lawful right; no comment having been made on his failure to testify thereto; Rev. St. 1899, § 4652 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2520), providing that, where an administrator is a party, the other party cannot testify in his own favor, unless the contract in issue was made with one living and competent to testify, not authorizing such instruction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 505; Dec. Dig. § 211.*]

5. PAYMENT (§ 65*)—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Payment is an affirmative defense, the burden of proving which is always on defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Payment, Cent. Dig. § 196; Dec. Dig. § 65.*]

6. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 538*)—INSTRUCTIONS—BURDEN OF PROOF—SHIFTING BURDEN.

In an action on a note for $1,830, executed in 1896 to a decedent, as to which defendant claimed payment and offered several receipts, defendant's second request to charge was that if the jury found that the receipts, which recited for some $1,200 and for the money advanced to defendant in full November 8, 1897, were signed by decedent, in absence of sufficient rebutting proof, they should find that decedent had received from defendant the amounts stated

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

if they were so signed, they were a complete defense, unless overcome by proof that the payments were not in fact made. Held, that the requests were erroneous as attempting to shift the burden of proof upon plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 1902; Dec. Dig. § 538.*]

7. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 538*)—INSTRUCTIONS—MISLEADING INSTRUCTION.

The reference in the second request to rebutting proof, without explanation, would have tended to mislead the jury, and the instruction would have misled the jury to believe that the production of the receipts alone would cause the burden of proving payment to shift, and that part of it prohibiting a recovery upon finding the receipt by decedent of the sums stated in the receipts was so wrong in law that it would have misdirected the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Dec. Dig. § 538.*]

8. TRIAL (§ 244*)—INSTRUCTIONS—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

In an action on a note executed to a decedent in which defendant pleaded payment and produced several receipts acknowledging payment for money advanced, a requested instruction that the production of the receipts signed by decedent was a complete defense unless overcome by proof showing that the payments were in fact not made was properly refused as unduly commenting on the effect of the receipts as evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 577-581; Dec. Dig. § 244.*]

9. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 490*)—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE—SHIFTING BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action on a note executed to a decedent in which defendant pleaded payment, the production by defendant of receipts for money advanced, signed by decedent, would not of itself shift the burden of proving nonpayment onto plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 1695-1697; Dec. Dig. § 499.*]

10. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 538*)—ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY TO ISSUES.

In an administrator's action on a note, in which defendant pleaded payment and offered several receipts for money advanced by decedent, signed by him, requested instructions to find for defendant, without finding that the payments receipted for were made on account of the note, which was the question in controversy, were erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Dec. Dig. § 538.*]

11. APPEAL AND ERROR (§§ 994, 995*)—QUESTIONS OF FACT—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES.

The credibility of the witnesses and weight of the evidence are matters peculiarly within the province of the trial court and jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3901-3906, 3907; Dec. Dig. §§ 994, 995.*]

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Daniel D. Fisher, Judge.

Action by Frederick O. Steltemeier, administrator of Edward Doyle, against J. V. S. Barrett. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Missouri, January 1st, 1896. Three years after date I promise to pay to Edward Doyle or order eighteen hundred and thirty no hundred dollars for value received with interest from date at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, until paid, and I agree to pay the same at maturity and same is due to Edward Doyle only. J. V. S. Barrett." The answer, after denying each and every allegation in the petition, sets out the note, admits the execution and delivery of it to Doyle, avers that the note was prepared on a printed blank form and the words, "date," "promise to pay," "or order," were printed as part of the blank form, and the words, "and the same is due to Edward Doyle only," were written by defendant, and avers that long prior to the maturity of the note he fully paid it to Doyle as well as paying to him, Doyle, all other notes he had ever made to him, and that Doyle at the time of the payment of the note was in possession of it, and that this is the only note bearing date January 1, 1896, that defendant ever made or delivered to Doyle. The answer further avers that defendant did not execute or deliver to Doyle the note described in the petition or any note of that date, save that set forth in his answer. This answer was sworn to by defendant. The reply is a general denial of the new matter. At the trial the plaintiff proved that he was the administrator of the estate of Doyle, and as such had duly qualified and taken possession of the assets of the estate. He also introduced evidence tending to prove that the note in suit had come into his possession as of the assets of the estate; that he had endeavored to collect it from defendant; that defendant had claimed that he had paid it. Plaintiff also introduced evidence tending to show how and when and by whom the note had been found among the effects of the decedent or had come to the hands of the parties who had turned it over to him, and also tending to show that defendant had made statements, and had done acts in connection with the note which it is claimed tended to contradict defendant's denial of indebtedness on the note, and, introducing the note in evidence, rested.

On part of defendant evidence was introduced tending to sustain his claim that he had paid the note, and that he owed decedent nothing on account of it, among the other evidence introduced by defendant being the receipts, which are set out in 115 Mo. App. 324, 91 S. W. 56, where the decision of this court is reported when the case was here on a former appeal. The receipts now particularly relied on by defendant are as follows:

"Received of J. V. S. Barrett, $1,235.85 for board, lodging and money advanced Oct. 8, 1900; Nov. 8, 1897. Edward Doyle."

"Received of J. V. S. Barrett the amount of money advanced to him by me in full Nov. 8, 1897. Edward Doyle."

The defendant at the trial was excluded from testifying as to transactions between himself and the decedent during the lifetime of the latter; his own testimony being confined to the narration of acts since the death of the decedent and to his transactions with the administrator and others after the death of the decedent. The witness Smidt, again testifying, the error in the admission of part of his testimony for which error, in part, the judgment was before reversed, was avoided both during this trial and by instructions. During the progress of the trial counsel for defendant offered in evidence a portion of the testimony of this witness Smidt which had been preserved in the bill of exceptions. On the court asking him what he offered it for, counsel said it was offered as contradictory of the testimony of the witness given at the present trial. Counsel for plaintiff objected to it unless all of this witness' testimony was read, whereupon the court said: "You didn't read any part of it to him, and ask him whether he made the statement or not. You asked him in a general way. You should have treated the witness fairly by reading the statement claimed he had made contradictory to his present statement. Let me see the part you want to read. The proper way and the fair way is for you to read the statement and ask him whether he made that statement or not." Counsel for defendant excepted to the remarks of the court; not, however, assigning any ground for the exception. Whereupon counsel handed the transcript of the testimony to the court with the pages marked which he proposed reading, and they were thereupon read, and the witness examined concerning what were claimed to be discrepancies between his testimony there given and what he had given in the present trial. Counsel for defendant also offered to read in evidence a letter which he had served on counsel for plaintiff, containing an offer by counsel concerning the examination of the back of some of the receipts given in evidence, there being some question as to whether paper had been pasted over the back of the original in an effort to conceal or cover up whatever was on the back. The court excluded it, to which defendant excepted. Much evidence pro and con was introduced in an effort to meet the issue as to whether the receipts in evidence covered the money evidenced by the note.

At the instance of plaintiff, the court gave three instructions, in the first of which the jury were told that the suit was on a note, the court setting the note out in the instruction as it appears in the petition. It also told the jury that the defendant denies every allegation in the petition, but, in answering further, also admits that he executed and delivered to the decedent a promissory note in words, as follows: "$1,830.00. St. Louis, Missouri, January 1st, 1896. Three years after date I promise to pay to Edward Doyle, or order, eighteen hundred and thirty, no hundred dollars, for value received, with interest from date at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, until paid, and I agree to pay the sum at maturity and the same is due to Edward Doyle only. J. V. S. Barrett." The instruction then proceeds: "And defendant admits that the note last referred to was the only note bearing date of January 1, 1896, that defendant ever made and delivered to the decedent." The second instruction was to the effect that it had been proved plaintiff was the person entitled to sue as administrator of the decedent, and that he was now such administrator. By the third instruction, the jury was told that if it believed from the evidence that defendant executed and delivered to decedent the note sued on, and further believed from the evidence that the note has not been paid, the jury must find for plaintiff for the value of the note, $1,830; but, if the jury finds the note had been partly paid, it would find for plaintiff only in such an amount as the jury finds from the evidence remains unpaid, and, if the jury further finds that the interest on the note or any part thereof has not been paid, it must find for plaintiff in such further amount as it finds from the evidence is due on account of interest. Of its own motion the court instructed the jury that defendant claims the note has been paid and fully satisfied, and that the burden of establishing by a preponderance of evidence that such payment has been made is upon the defendant. In the second instruction given by the court of its own motion the jury were instructed as to the meaning of the term "burden of proof." In the third the usual instruction as to the credibility of witnesses was given, while in the fourth instruction the jury were advised that nine of their number had power to return a verdict. Exceptions were duly saved by defendant to the giving of all these instructions. At the request of defendant, the court gave three instructions. The first is to the effect that, if the jury believed from the evidence that the note offered in evidence on the trial and interest thereon was paid, they would find for the defendant. By the second instruction they were told that the note offered in evidence is not a negotiable note, and by the third they were told that any statements of the witness Smidt while testifying upon the trial of the cause as to what was told him by Edward Doyle, deceased, are to be entirely disregarded by the jury as evidence in the case in arriving at their verdict. Defendant also asked the court for three instructions substantially as follows: First, that under the law the defendant could not testify in this action to any transaction between him and the deceased relating to the note sued on or its payment unless the plaintiff had consented that he might do so, and that the failure of defendant to explain any matter connected with the note or its alleged payment is not to be considered against him in arriving at a verdict. In the second instruction, the court was asked to charge that, if the jury found from the evidence that the receipts offered in evidence as being signed by the deceased were in fact signed by him, "then, in the absence of sufficient rebutting proof, it is the duty of the jury to find that deceased received from the defendant on November 8, 1897, the sum of $1,235.85, and also all the money which up to that time said Edward Doyle had advanced to defendant, and that plaintiff cannot recover in this action, and they are further instructed that rebutting proof sufficient to overcome those receipts must be clear and convincing, and not rest upon mere impressions." The third instruction asked, and refused, was to the effect that plaintiff claims the note sued on is wholly unpaid, and defendant claims that it was paid to the decedent "and produces in support of his contention receipts claimed to have been signed by said Edward Doyle, and the jury were further instructed that, if they find from the evidence that the signature of those receipts is that of said Edward Doyle, then those receipts are a complete defense to plaintiff's claim, unless they are overcome by proof that the payments acknowledged by those receipts were not in fact made, and the proof for that purpose must be clear and convincing and not resting on mere surmises." The court refused these instructions, and defendant duly excepted.

Further controversy arose over remarks made by counsel for plaintiff in closing the case to the jury, but no request appears to have been made to the court to correct them, nor to check counsel and no exception saved of record.

There was a verdict for plaintiff for $3,023.78. Motion for new trial was duly filed, overruled, exception saved, and an appeal duly perfected to this court by defendant.

Kinealy & Kinealy, for appellant. John S. Leahy, for respondent.

REYNOLDS, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). The learned and able counsel for appellant present four propositions or points as their assignments of errors in the case. The first point is directed to the remarks of the court before quoted when defendant offered to read from the bill of exceptions a portion of the testimony of witness Smidt on the former trial, and which remarks are alleged by counsel to be highly improper and prejudicial. The second point made is that defendant should have been permitted to read to the jury the letter to plaintiff's counsel in regard to removing the paper from the back of the receipt. The third and fourth points are the alleged error of the court in refusing the first, second, and third instructions asked by defendant and refused.

Taking these up in the order mentioned, we do not agree with counsel that the remarks of the court excepted to were so prejudicial to the defendant as to warrant a reversal of the judgment. While it is true that our appellate courts have gone to great lengths in enforcing the nonintervention by the trial judge in many matters at the trial, it is not to be overlooked that much latitude is to be allowed that judge. He is presiding and has under his eye the manner and demeanor of counsel, and their manner of dealing with the witnesses, and, when the record taken as a whole shows that he is endeavoring fairly and impartially to conduct the trial, and keep counsel within proper bounds, his discretion and his efforts to conduct the case in an orderly manner are not to be interfered with, and are not ground of reversal unless manifestly unfair and improper. Human nature is no different on the bench than at the bar, and we are all familiar with the fact that, in the progress of a heated and vigorously contested case, any one, whether judge or counsel, may make quick and even heated remarks and retorts, and that, unconsciously perhaps, counsel appear unfair to a witness. But, to render remarks of the court reversible error, this court must be convinced from an examination of the whole record, and consideration of all the facts surrounding the circumstance, that they were made improperly, and were of a character to prejudice the case. In the case under consideration the remarks of the court were directed to secure fair treatment of the witness. It is as much the duty of the trial judge to protect the witnesses who are before it and subject to examination of counsel as it is to see to any other incident connected with the administration of justice and which lead to the orderly conduct of trials, and great latitude must be allowed the trial judge in the exercise of this duty. We see no reversible error, in fact, no error whatever, in the remarks to which exception is taken.

Nor do we think there was error in excluding the letter addressed by counsel on one side to counsel on the other as to submitting a paper which was in controversy to an examination outside, or even inside, of court. An examination outside of court is not in the control of the court in a case of this kind, and, as the examination of that very paper could be made in the presence of the court and the paper was in evidence before the jury, and was submitted to the inspection of the jury, counsel certainly had all the advantage of any disclosure or fact which an examination might reveal.

No authority is referred to in support of the assignment of error on the refusal of the first instruction asked by defendant, which is to the effect that failure of the defendant to testify was not to be taken adversely to him, except section 4652, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2520). All there is in that section as relevant to the point is as to the qualifications and disqualifications of witnesses. Reading the section throws no light on the matter contended for, and does not meet the point made. While in criminal cases the statute (section 2638, Rev. St. 1899 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 1569]) expressly prohibits any comment whatever to be made on the failure of the defendant to testify, we know of no authority which extends this to civil cases, and, as a matter of fact, courts have frequently commented on the failure of a party to testify in civil, particularly equity, cases. That is far from holding that the jury should be instructed that the reason a party in a civil case has not testified is because the other side has not waived the statutory disability. Such an instruction would be a serious reflection upon and prejudicial to the party who has merely exercised his lawful right. Especially should no such instruction be given in a case of this kind when the right is exercised in protection of the dead. Nor does it appear in this case that any comment whatever was made on the failure of defendant to testify to acts between him and the decedent. Furthermore, it distinctly appears in the record that when defendant, testifying in his own behalf, was asked by his counsel, after being shown the note in suit, whether or not he had signed it, counsel for plaintiff objected, and the court sustained the objection. Counsel for defendant thereupon said he thought they were entitled to know the ground of the objection. Whereupon the court said that the defendant is not a competent witness for anything that transpired before the administrator was appointed; that that is the rule, but it is not an iron-clad rule. Counsel for defendant then remarked that the objection might be waived, and asked whether the objection went to the form of the question or to the fact of incompetency. Thereupon counsel for plaintiff said that he placed the objection on the ground of the incompetency of the witness. It was therefore clearly before the jury that defendant was willing to testify but was shut off under the law by the objection of plaintiff. But we do not place our ruling on this ground, but on the ground that the instructions should not have been given under the circumstances or facts.

The last proposition relied on, as to the refusal of the court to give the second and third instructions, is not tenable. Those instructions are subject to the general criticism that they endeavor to shift the burden of proof of payment from the defendant to the plaintiff. Payment is an affirmative defense, the burden of which always and under all circumstances rests on the defendant. Moreover, to have given this instruction in the language asked would have had a tendency to mislead the jury and confuse them. It is doubtful if the ordinary jury knows what rebutting proof is. The effect of this second instruction, if given, would have been, with any ordinary jury, to have caused them to think that the mere production of receipts was in itself such strong evidence of payment of this note that the burden had shifted. This is not the law. Furthermore, in the second refused instruction, the first clause of it, after advising the jury that, in the absence of sufficient rebutting proof, "it is the duty of the jury to find that deceased received from defendant on November 8, 1897, the sum of $1,235.85, and also all the money which up to that time Edward Doyle had advanced to defendant," concluded, "and that plaintiff cannot recover in this action." This is so wrong in law that it would inevitably have misdirected the jury, and, if given as asked, would have compelled a reversal. The third instruction refused is not only obnoxious to most of the above criticism, but is an undue comment on particular evidence in the case, in effect telling the jury that the production of the receipts is such conclusive evidence of the fact that those sums had been paid, as to require affirmative evidence on the part of plaintiff to rebut this presumption. Both these instructions omit any reference to the necessity of the jury finding and believing from the evidence that payments evidenced by the receipts were made on account of the note in suit. That was the very point in controversy.

We have not thought it necessary to set out all the rather voluminous testimony in this case more at length, deeming it sufficient to say that there are sharp contradictions and also much of it going to the nature of the transactions between plaintiff and defendant, some of it having a tendency to put a very unfavorable construction on the acts of defendant in connection with the note sued on after the death of Doyle. After an examination of the testimony and the proceedings at the trial, we are satisfied the claims of the respective parties were so presented to the jury as to leave the determination of the issue turn almost entirely upon the credibility of witnesses and on the weight of the evidence. These are matters peculiarly within the province of the trial judge and the jury; and, finding no error tending to the manifest injury of the defendant in the rulings of the court on the admission and exclusion of testimony or in the giving and refusing of instructions, the judgment of the circuit court is affirmed. All concur.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Benton County; C. A. Denton, Judge.

Action by Maggie Bailey against John W. Bailey. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

W. S. Jackson and Barnett & Barnett, for appellant. Henry P. Lay, for respondent.

BROADDUS, P. J. This is a suit in replevin, brought by respondent against the appellant, before a justice of the peace, to recover the possession of a two year old filly. On trial de novo in the circuit court, the verdict and judgment were for plaintiff, and defendant appealed.

The respondent is the widow of one Fred W. Bailey, deceased, son of the appellant. The widow claims that the filly in controversy belonged to her deceased husband, Fred Bailey, at the time of his death, and her claim of ownership is through him. An order of the probate court was introduced in evidence showing administration on the estate of Fred Bailey was dispensed with, and the widow was authorized to receive and collect the money and assets of the estate belonging to her deceased husband, and it is claimed that the filly in question was a part of the assets of his estate. There was evidence on part of plaintiff showing declarations on the part of defendant to the effect that he spoke of the filly as belonging to his son Fred. On the other hand, there was evidence tending to show that Fred recognized the filly as the property of his father. The defendant offered in evidence, and the 27th day of December, 1906, appellant and his son Fred made a mortgage to the Citizens' National Bank of Fairfield jointly mortgaging the said filly with other personal property. That in March, 1907, Fred, intending to go West, wanted $100 to go on; but, as there was no other property on which to raise money, it was agreed between them and Hudson, the cashier of the bank, that he would take a mortgage to secure a payment of $100 on the property already mortgaged, leaving out a span of black horses, with the agreement that the Baileys should sell the span, and with the proceeds pay off the first mortgage. And that Hudson was offered as a witness to prove the agreement, and that it was carried out, and that the first mortgage was paid off. As the second mortgage was said to be lost or destroyed, defendant offered to prove by witness Hudson that the mortgage was executed by defendant alone, and that Fred was present at the time, and knew what occurred. A third mortgage executed by defendant on the filly, purporting to be a renewal of the second, was also offered.

The court committed error in rejecting the evidence of the first and second mortgages and the evidence of the witness Hudson. The first, it is true, does not go far to show who was the owner of the filly, Fred or defendant; but it became important in its connection with the second. If Fred was present when defendant alone executed the second mortgage on the filly and assented thereto, it was evidence of the most persuasive character that the filly was not his property, but that of the defendant. It would stand like any other act or declaration of defendant claiming ownership in the property, with the assent and concurrence of Fred; and Hudson was a competent witness to prove what Fred said or did at the time. The fact that the latter is dead did not prevent Hudson's competency as a witness under the statute. The bank of which he was cashier was not a party to the suit or the cause of action. Southern Commercial Bank v. Slattery, 168 Mo. 620, 66 S. W. 1066. The statute has often been construed by the appellate courts of this state, and the decisions have not always been in line; yet we do not believe any court has ever held that one who was neither a party to the suit nor contract or cause in action was incompetent to testify as a witness. At common law the witness was competent.

The third, or renewal, mortgage, was properly excluded, as it amounted to a mere declaration by defendant of ownership of the property.

For the error noted, the cause is reversed and remanded. All concur.

5. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 33*)—ELECTION—ORDER—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

A finding of fact by the county court, in passing on the question whether a local option election petitioned for shall be ordered, that "the pretended census" of a city was "fraudulent and void, and not based on any list, count, or enumeration of the inhabitants," is conclusive on an appellate court, on a collateral attack by mandamus to compel the issuance of a license to sell intoxicating liquors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Dec. Dig. § 33.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Lawrence County; F. O. Johnson, Judge.

Action in the name of the State, on the relation of Ed. Ryan, for mandamus to T. C. Wooten and others, as Justices, and B. F. Woodford, as Clerk, of the Lawrence County Court. From a judgment for defendants, relator appeals. Affirmed.

application for a dramshop license, said dramshop to be kept on lot 1 in block 28 of the city of Pierce City, in Lawrence county, and in every respect complied with the statutory requirements as a dramshop keeper. His application was refused, on the ground that the county court had made an order for the submission of the question of the adoption of local option under article 3, c. 22, of the Revised Statutes of 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 1733-1740), whereupon the relator filed his petition for mandamus in the circuit court of Lawrence county, praying that said court direct the county court to issue him a license as a dramshop keeper, or show cause for such refusal. An alternative writ of mandamus was issued. In due time the respondents T. C. Wooten, John J. Holt, and James Doyle, justices of the county court of Lawrence county, filed their return to the alternative writ, in which they admitted that the said Ed. Ryan, relator, at the time of filing his petition for a license as a dramshop keeper, possessed all the statutory requirements, and that his petition was in conformity with the requirements of the dramshop law, but that his petition had been denied on the ground that proceedings were pending for a vote under the local option law. The return further stated that, on the 6th day of January, 1909, a petition in due form, signed by one-tenth of the qualified voters of said county who resided outside the corporate limits of the city of Aurora, had been presented to the county court, asking said court to order a special election to be held in Lawrence county to determine whether spirituous and intoxicating liquors, including wine and beer, should be sold outside the corporate limits of the city of Aurora. The return further stated that on the 9th day of January, 1909, after an examination, the county court granted the prayer of the petitioners, ordered a special election to be held for the purpose of determining whether intoxicants should be sold in Lawrence county, and fixed the date of the election and form of tickets, in compliance with article 3, c. 22, Rev. St. 1899. It further appeared from the return that notice of such election was duly published in the papers designated in the order; that the election was held in pursuance to said order; that in due time the votes were canvassed, a majority of the votes cast being against the sale of intoxicating liquors, and the result of the election was duly certified. There is no contention in this case that the notice of the local option election was not in conformity with the statute, nor is there any objection made by the relator to any of the proceedings of the county court, the petition for a special election was filed, and thereafter, that it then had a population of more than 2,500 inhabitants, and that the voters in said city were, under the orders of the county court, entitled to vote at such local option election. It further appears from the return of the respondents to the alternative writ that, at the time the petition for said local option election was pending, and its sufficiency was under consideration by the county court, the question arose before the county court as to whether Pierce City had a population of more than 2,500 inhabitants; that as to such question a hearing was had, and the court heard testimony offered by both sides as to the population of Pierce City. Among other evidence considered was a census of Pierce City, purporting to have been officially taken under order of its board of aldermen, for the year 1904, and another for the year 1907, each tending to show a population of more than 2,500 inhabitants. The county court, after hearing all the testimony, upon consideration of the question, found that the city of Aurora was the only town or city within said Lawrence county having a population of more than 2,500 inhabitants, that Pierce City, a city within said county, had a population of less than 2,500 inhabitants, and that the pretended censuses of the said city for 1904 and 1907 were each false, fraudulent, and void, and that the pretended returns and results of each of said censuses were not based upon a list, count, or enumeration of the inhabitants of the said city of Pierce City, whereupon the county court proceeded to order a special election under the local option law as hereinbefore stated.

The relator filed a motion for a peremptory writ and for judgment on the return. This motion was by the circuit court overruled, the alternative writ was quashed, and judgment entered that relator's bill be dismissed. In due time, the relator filed his motion for a new trial, in which he set up that the county court had no authority to declare that the said city of Pierce City did not have 2,500 inhabitants at the time the order was made for holding the local option election. This motion was overruled, and he has perfected his appeal to this court.

NIXON, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). The statute concerning dramshops (section 2993, Rev. St. 1899 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 1717]) provides that, when the petition for a dramshop license is signed by two-thirds of the assessed taxpaying citizens in the block, and its requirements are complied with, the county court shall grant such license. This statute is mandatory when the petitioner complies with the requirements.

107 S. W. 1064; State ex rel. v. Meyers, 80 Mo. 601; Bean v. County Court, 33 Mo. App. 635; State ex rel. v. McCannon, 111 Mo. App. 626, 86 S. W. 510; Harlan v. State, 136 Ala. 150, 33 South. 858. In this case it is conceded that all the requirements of the statute were complied with by the relator, and the sole question remaining for our decision is as to the validity of the local option election; the only ground upon which said election is assailed being that Pierce City was, at the time the petition for the election was filed, a city in Lawrence county with a population of more than 2,500 inhabitants, and that under the orders made by the county court the voters residing in such city were authorized to vote on the question of the sale of intoxicating liquors. Section 3027 of the Revised Statutes of 1890 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1733) contains the following language: "Provided, that at an election ordered under the provisions of this section, no one shall be entitled to vote who is a resident of any incorporated town having a population of twenty-five hundred inhabitants or more."

This proceeding by mandamus was an indirect attempt to contest the validity of the local option election. The adjudication of the validity or invalidity of such an election is a collateral question to the direct relief sought, namely, the issuance to relator of a dramshop license. The relator's right to such license depends upon the adjudication of the collateral question as to whether the city of Pierce City, at the time the petition for the election was presented, had a population of 2,500 inhabitants or more. The county court, at the time the petition was presented to them asking for a special election, heard the evidence on both sides, and found "that the city of Aurora was the only town or city within said county having a population of 2,500 inhabitants or more, and that the city of Pierce City was a city within said county having a population of less than 2,500 inhabitants." We cannot, in the present indirect attack on that finding, review the evidence upon which the judgment of the county court was founded, and set aside their finding because not supported by sufficient evidence. It is a settled rule that mandamus cannot be made the instrument for giving a court jurisdiction of litigation on collateral matters. State ex rel. v. Martin, 55 Fla. 538, 46 South., loc. cit. 426; Underwood v. Commissioners, 67 Conn. 411, 35 Atl. 274; Kennon v. Blackburn, 127 Ky. 39, 104 S. W. 908, 31 Ky. Law Rep. 1246; Hammond v. Darlington, 109 Mo. App., loc. cit. 345, 84 S. W. 446; 2 Spelling on Injunctions and Other Extra. Rem. (2d Ed.) §§ 1386-1440; High's Extra. Leg. Rem. (3d Ed.) § 189. The finding of the county court that one-tenth of the qualified voters signed the petition, and that Pierce City was a city with a population of less than 2,500 inhabitants, is res adjudicata, and such finding cannot be attacked in the present collateral proceeding. State v. Rinke (Mo. App.) 121 S. W. 159; State v. Searcy, 39 Mo. App. 393; State v. Dugan, 110 Mo. 138, 19 S. W. 195; State v. McCord, 207 Mo. 519, 106 S. W. 27, 123 Am. St. Rep. 410. "Whether the vote was legally taken or not is entirely collateral." People v. Hamilton, 27 Misc. Rep. 363, 58 N. Y. Supp. 959. The total vote in Lawrence county at the local option election was 2,686 votes against the sale, and 1,005 votes for the sale, of intoxicating liquors, a majority against the sale of 1,681 votes. This decision against the sale of intoxicating liquors "should be upheld by every reasonable intendment." People v. Hamilton, supra.

From the foregoing examination of this case, it clearly appears that the law has given us its mandate to uphold and maintain, and not invalidate the expressed will of the electors of Lawrence county at the local option election.

The order of the trial court overruling relator's motion for judgment and quashing the alternative writ and dismissing his bill is hereby affirmed. All concur.

On Petition for Rehearing.

In this case, appellant has filed a petition for rehearing, and has argued the same with great ardor and insistence.

Upon reconsideration, we are unable to shut our eyes to the fact that one of the enumerators who took the census in question in the city of Pierce City was prosecuted for a misdemeanor under section 6300 of the Revised Statutes of 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 3147), for willfully falsifying the returns of such census; that he pleaded guilty to the criminal charge, and at the present term of this court the judgment of conviction was affirmed. Aside from any question of fraud in the taking of this so-called census, the argument of appellant's counsel proceeds upon false premises in that he assumes in this case that the county court of Lawrence county and all other courts were required to take judicial notice of the taking of the census in question and the entry of the result on the records of the city. The paramount question is, Was there a census taken such as is contemplated by the statutes under section 3028 (page 1735) and section 6300? A mere colorable proceeding on the part of the board of aldermen without any substantial compliance with the law, as to the taking of such census, for the purpose of defeating the adoption of the local option law in the city of Pierce City, would not import any notice of the number of the inhabitants of the city of Pierce City.

A question arose for consideration before the county court of Lawrence county, at the time the petition for the local option election was filed, whether any census, in the legal acceptance of that term, had in fact been taken in the city of Pierce City; that is, whether any enumeration was made that could be called a "census" within the meaning of sections 3028 and 6300 of the Revised Statutes of 1899. The "census," as provided for by these sections of the statutes, can only mean an official enumeration of the inhabitants and a public record thereof. "A census is an official enumeration of the inhabitants with details of sex, age, family," etc. 6 Cyc. 725. A census of the city of Pierce City would be an official enrollment of the inhabitants of said city. Such an enrollment or registration of the people when taken would become a public document, to be preserved in the archives of the city, where it might be subject to the inspection of all those who were interested. "A census is not merely a sum total, but an official list containing the names of all the inhabitants." City of Huntington v. Cast, 149 Ind. 250, 48 N. E. 1025. At the time the petition for the local option election was presented to the county court of Lawrence county they were required to determine as to whether there had been any census taken of the inhabitants of the city of Pierce City, such as in contemplation of law would constitute a census. The result of their investigation is stated in the following finding and order: "The court, after hearing all the evidence offered, finds that the pretended censuses of the city of Pierce City were false, fraudulent, and void, and not based upon any list, count, or enumeration of the inhabitants of the city of Pierce City." Such finding by the county court that there had been no legal census taken is conclusive on an appellate court on a collateral attack.

The petition for rehearing is accordingly denied. All concur.

review the proceedings of T. C. Wooten and others, as Justices, and B. F. Woodford, as Clerk, of the Lawrence County Court. There was a judgment dismissing the petition and denying a new trial, from which relator appeals. Affirmed.

This litigation is rooted in a local option election held in Lawrence county on February 13, 1909, at which a majority of the votes were cast against the sale of spirituous and intoxicating liquors. The relator, in his petition for a writ of certiorari, alleged that at the time of the vote on local option, the city of Pierce City was a municipal corporation of more than 2,500 inhabitants, and duly incorporated as a city of the fourth class, that relator was mayor, and a taxpayer, of said city, and that prior to such vote said city had two licensed saloons, from which it was deriving a revenue of $2,000 per year, and that by reason of said vote, said city was prevented from exercising its charter powers to license and regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors within its limits, and was deprived of the $2,000 license tax. The relator prayed that the circuit court, by its writ of certiorari, should require the respondents, who are the justices of the county court of Lawrence county, to certify to the circuit court a complete copy of their acts and proceedings in relation to the election, "including all documents considered by them in the determination of the population of Pierce City." The trial court issued the writ of certiorari in the usual form, containing no reference to the production of the documents referred to in relator's petition. The respondents, however, in their return, make ample amends by furnishing a voluminous supply of documentary evidence relating principally to the census of the city of Pierce City—one taken in 1904, and another in 1907—showing, or tending to show, a population of 2,500 inhabitants or more. Further, it appears by respondents' return that, at the time the petition was presented to the county court asking for a local option election, a controversy arose, and two sides appeared before the county court and offered evidence as to the population of Pierce City; one side claiming that two censuses had been taken of the inhabitants of the city of Pierce City, and the other side challenging such censuses on the ground that they were not an official enumeration or list of such inhabitants, but simply a sum total reported by the enumerators, and were a fraudulent pretext devised and designed to defeat the adoption of local option in the city of Pierce City.

The county court, after hearing the evidence offered, made an order of which the following is a part: "And the court, after hearing testimony offered and being fully ad-more, and that the city of Pierce City is a city within said county having, at the time of said petition a population of less than 2,500 inhabitants, and that the pretended census of said city of 1904 and another of 1907 are each false, fraudulent, and void, and the pretended returns and results of each of said censuses were not based upon any list, count, or enumeration of said city of Pierce City." It is conceded by relator that the petition, notice, canvass of votes, and all the subsequent proceedings of the county court conformed to the requirements of the statutes governing local option elections, except its finding of the number of inhabitants of the city of Pierce City. In the trial court the relator filed a motion for judgment on the respondents' return, and asking that the proceedings of the county court be quashed, which motion was by the trial court overruled, and judgment entered that relator's petition be dismissed. A motion for a new trial was duly filed and overruled, and the case is here for hearing on appeal.

W. Cloud and Thos. Carlin, for appellant.
Archie L. Hilpert, Charles L. Henson, and W. B. Skinner, for respondents.

NIXON, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). It was unquestionably the purpose of the relator, in suing out the writ of certiorari in this case, to have the documentary evidence, offered before the county court at the time the petition for a local option election was presented, brought up in the respondents' return and reviewed by the trial court, so as to thereby secure a retrial of the question whether or not Pierce City, at the time of the filing of such petition, was a municipal corporation of more than 2,500 inhabitants. This belief that the writ of certiorari can be used to accomplish any such purpose is a total misapprehension of the functions of such writ. The writ of certiorari only brings up the record, and only such matters as appear on the face thereof which go to the jurisdiction of the tribunal to which the writ is directed can be reviewed by such writ. Ward v. Board of Equalization, 135 Mo. 309, 36 S. W. 648; State ex rel. v. Madison County Court, 136 Mo., loc. cit. 326, 37 S. W. 1126. The county court is of statutory origin, having neither common-law nor equitable jurisdiction. No provision has been made for preserving evidence taken before it and making it a part of the record. Therefore the evidence adduced before such court on the hearing of habeas corpus (or writ of certiorari), even if reviewable, is no part of the record proper, nor could it be made so in the absence of statutory enactment providing for so doing by bill of exceptions or otherwise; hence such evidence is not the subject of review here. There is nothing for us to pass upon save the record proper. State ex rel. v. Madison County Court, 136 Mo., loc. cit. 327, 37 S. W. 1126; State ex rel. v. Walbridge, 62 Mo. App. 162; Hannibal and St. J. R. R. Co. v. State Board, 64 Mo. 308; State ex rel. v. Bland, 168 Mo., loc. cit. 7, 67 S. W. 580; State v. Common Council, 53 Minn. 238, 55 N. W. 118, 39 Am. St. Rep. 595; Baizer v. Lasch, 28 Wis. 271.

The record proper in this case, which we can only consider, consists of the petition presented to the county court for a special election and the orders of record made concerning such election, the notice of the local option election with proof of the publication of the same, and the abstract and certificate of the canvass of the votes cast showing the results of the election. At common law, and in those states which have not departed materially therefrom (of which Missouri is one), the accepted doctrine is that, where a tribunal has jurisdiction, a writ of certiorari does not lie to correct mere errors in the exercise of rightful jurisdiction. 4 Ency. of Pl. & Prac. 98; State ex rel. v. Smith, 101 Mo. 174, 14 S. W. 108; Railroad v. State Board, 64 Mo. 294; State ex rel. v. Edwards, 104 Mo. 125, 16 S. W. 117; State ex rel. v. Shelton, 154 Mo. 670, 55 S. W. 1008, 50 L. R. A. 798; State ex rel. v. Moniteau County Court, 45 Mo. App. 387. To cite more cases in support of this principle is "wasteful and ridiculous excess."

As the law has given us no commission, under the showing made in this case, to set aside the order of the county court of Lawrence county calling a special election to vote upon the question of local option in said county, for the reasons herein stated the judgment of the circuit court quashing the writ of certiorari and dismissing the petition of the relator is hereby affirmed. All concur.

J. B. Majors, L. W. Booher, and Hine & Cross, for appellant. J. A. Sanders, S. Fee, and P. C. Breit, for respondent.

JOHNSON, J. This case was before us on a former appeal (134 Mo. App. 717, 115 S. W. 470), and was reversed and remanded. A second trial resulted in a verdict and judgment for defendant, and the cause is here again on the appeal of plaintiff. We refer to our former opinion for a statement of the facts and our views on the law of the case.

When we remanded the cause for another trial, we thought perhaps facts not brought out by defendant might exist, which, if adduced, would give a different cast to the case; but we find the evidence in the present record to be substantially the same as that before considered. In our opinion we spoke of defendant's admission that he had been careless in signing the contract. In the last trial, apparently thinking he had "put his foot in it" by that admission, defendant denied admitting he had been careless, and said he had only confessed to being negligent. He then declared he had not been negligent, "because I didn't have a chance to be negligent." Of course, no differentiating effect should be accorded such quibbling. The law will characterize his conduct, regardless of his own opinion about it. He was inexcusably careless. Being a competent business man, laboring under no disability, he had no business signing a contract without reading it, merely because the man who asked him to sign it was in a hurry to catch a train. We declare as a matter of law that his own fault was the sole cause of the predicament in which he finds himself, and since he admits that the goods were received by him, and it is conceded he has paid but $60 on the account, there was no issue of fact to go to the jury, and the learned trial judge should have directed a verdict for the remainder due on the contract price of the goods.

This being a suit on account for goods sold and delivered, there is no merit in the point that the justice of the peace acquired no jurisdiction of the action because of the failure of plaintiff to file the written contract.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Chariton County; John P. Butler, Judge.

Action by H. C. Atterbury and others against W. D. West and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

H. J. West and Jones & Conkling, for appellants. Benecke & Benecke and Lozier, Morris & Atwood, for respondents.

BROADDUS, P. J. This is an action by certain property owners to restrain the alleged unlawful obstruction of a public street in the incorporated town of Mendon, Mo., and for a judgment for its removal. Plaintiffs are joint owners of four lots at the intersection of Main and Third streets in said town, upon which there is a building occupied by them as an implement, vehicle, and harness store, and also for general merchandise purposes. This building fronts on Main street, which is one of the principal thoroughfares of the town, and about 76 feet in width between the sidewalks. Plaintiffs' evidence tended to show: That the entire space was used by the public; that it was especially needed by plaintiffs as a means of free access by their patrons to their place of business; that the crowds of people who would be attracted to hear the music of the band would obstruct free communication, of persons who might desire to buy, with plaintiffs; that defendants Engleman, Hubbard, Stewart, and Lowe constituted the board of aldermen of the town; that defendant West was the mayor; that defendant Backus was the leader of a brass band; that said defendants as mayor and board of aldermen authorized the erection of and participated with defendant Backus in constructing, and causing to be constructed, upon said street in front of plaintiffs' place of business, a wooden structure about 13 feet square and 13 feet high, to be used as a stand for a brass band; that the erection of the structure was an obstruction to the street and interfered with free access to plaintiffs' place of business by their patrons; and that they will suffer in consequence of the erection and use of said structure, injury over and above that shared by the general public. In addition, it appeared that plaintiffs were the owners of the fee to the center of said street, subject to the public use, and that the structure was situated on that part of which they were such owners. It appeared from the evidence that the structure had been completed before the trial, wherefore plaintiffs asked and were granted permission to amend their petition to conform to the evidence and to include a prayer for an abatement of the nuisance. The amendment was made as proposed. The court found for the plaintiffs, and decreed that the said mayor and aldermen remove the obstruction within 30 days, and the defendant Backus was enjoined from using it for musical practice or entertainments as located. The defendants appealed.

In the first place, defendants complain that the amendment was unauthorized for the reason that the original petition did not state a cause of action. Without going into particulars, we are of the opinion that the petition did state a good cause of action, and that there was no abuse of discretion by the court in allowing the amendment.

The principal question, however, raised by the appellants, is that, as the structure had been completed before the commencement of the action, injunction will not lie. It is held that: "Injunction lies only for a threatened wrong for which no adequate legal remedy is afforded, and a court of equity will not issue an injunction to prevent the performance of an act already consummated." Carlin v. Wolff, 154 Mo. 530, 51 S. W. 679, 55 S. W. 441. And we find this general statement in Verdin v. City of St. Louis, 131 Mo., loc. cit. 117, 33 S. W. 502, that: "The appropriate function of a writ of injunction is to afford preventive relief only, * * * and it is only to be used for the prevention of future injury actually threatened." The law is similarly stated by many legal authorities; but we will confine our consideration of the question to what has been said by our own court. The case of Carlin v. Wolff, supra, was commented on by this court in Downing v. Corcoran, 112 Mo. App. 645, 87 S. W. 114. The opinion reads: "It is suggested that the acts complained of are now, and were at the beginning of the proceeding, accomplished facts, and equity will not undertake to restrain the doing of things already done. The case of Carlin v. Wolff, 154 Mo. 534, 51 S. W. 679, 55 S. W. 441, is cited to sustain the suggestion. * * * That rule of law was stated in that case to the single and isolated act of obstructing an alley." It was consequently held not to apply to instances of a series of continuous wrongs. In State v. Franklin, 133 Mo. App. 486, 113 S. W. 652, the proceeding was to compel defendant to remove an obstruction from the street which consisted of a stable and fences. It was held that the state, through its law officer, the prosecuting attorney, may maintain proceedings in equity to abate the nuisance. And the Supreme Court has declared the law to be that it is settled beyond all dispute that the equitable relief of preventing and abating a nuisance may be sought on one proceeding in a court of equity. Baker v. McDaniel, 178 Mo., loc. cit. 468, 77 S. W. 531. Sherwood, J., who delivered the opinion in Carlin v. Wolff, supra, said, in Paddock v. Somes, 102 Mo., loc. cit. 240, 14 S. W. 749, 10 L. R. A. 234, that: "The question of nuisance having been established at law, and, where this has been done, the court will grant an injunction as a matter of course, where, as here, such nuisance is of a continuous or constantly recurring character." Since the decision in that case, the courts are holding that it is not necessary to first establish the fact of the existence of the nuisance by a court of law before equity will interpose to prevent and abate it, but that the equity power of the court extends and embraces every feature of the case, as is said in Baker v. McDaniel, supra.

There is no conflict in the decisions of the state when properly analyzed. The acts complained of constitute a continuing nuisance by reason of the fact that, so long as it remained and was used for the purpose of its construction, it would operate to interfere with the plaintiffs in their business as merchants.

Much of appellants' brief and argument is predicated upon the theory that an unjunction will not lie, where the injury complained of is common to the public at large. Such is the law; but, as we have seen already, it has no application, because the injury to plaintiffs is special, and they have, and will, suffer damage over and above the injury the community at large will suffer. Baker v. McDaniel, supra.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 16, 1909.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 564*)—SPECIAL TAX BILLS—ACTIONS—LIMITATIONS—"PAID."

St. Louis City Charter, art. 6, § 25, as amended in 1901 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4863), providing that tax bills for public improvements shall be divided into not less than three nor more than 7 equal parts, payable in annual installments, the first payable 30 days after notice, provided that, where bills are not paid in installments, the lien thereof shall terminate within two years after their date, gives the right to pay special assessments in installments, and, where tax bills are so payable, an action is not barred in two years, though the holder of the bills elects to adjudge all the installments due on default in payment of the first installment, the word "paid" in the proviso meaning "payable," so that the proviso will read that, where bills are not payable in installments, the lien shall terminate within two years after their date.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Daniel G. Taylor, Judge.

Action by Jeremiah Fruin and others against C. A. Meredith and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

The facts in the case are set forth so fully by counsel for the appellants that opposing counsel have filed no counter statement, and it is so satisfactory to the court that we adopt practically all of it, so far as it goes, as set out by counsel. It is as follows:

"This is an action, in the usual form, for the enforcement of four special tax bills for the improvement of Warne avenue, against a parcel of ground in city block No. 3,545, of the city of St. Louis, lying between Warne, Florissant, and Mary avenues, as shown upon the plat filed with the abstract. Four bills were issued against this property on the theory that it comprised four distinct lots, known as Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4, fronting on Warne avenue. The petition is in four counts, one for each tax bill. The petition alleges, and the evidence shows that the tax bills were issued on the 5th day of January, 1906, and were, on the same day, registered in the office of the board of public improvements and in the comptroller's office, and certified and delivered to plaintiffs, and that on the 12th day of January, 1906, the defendant C. A. Meredith acknowledged in writing the service of notice of the bills and demand for payment of the same. Each of the bills had attached to it seven installment coupons, in accordance with the charter and the ordinance authorizing the improvement, the first installment being due on February 12, 1906, 30 days after the notice had been given of the issuance of the bills, and the remaining installments at yearly intervals thereafter, until all had been paid. Default was made in the payment of the first installment, and each count of the plaintiff's petition contains the following language: 'Plaintiffs have elected, and do elect, to treat all of said installments and the interest thereon as due February 12, 1906, the date when defendant defaulted in the payment of the first installment of said special tax bill as provided by the charter of the city of St. Louis.' The petition was filed January 11, 1908.

"Three distinct defenses were raised by the answer: (1) That the lien of the special tax bills sued upon had expired by limitation, under the terms of section 25 of article 6 of the amended charter of the city of St. Louis. (2) That the tax bills were erroneously issued, in that lots 1, 2, 3, and 4 were treated and taxed as separate and distinct lots; whereas, they had, by use, become one lot within the meaning of the charter. (3) That the taxing district had been improperly defined, in that the total depth of lots 1, 2, 3, and 4 had been included in the taxing district, although the improvements upon the consolidated lot were built to front, and said lot was treated by the defendants as fronting, on Florissant avenue, in consequence whereof the line bounding the taxing district should have been drawn midway between Warne and Mary avenues.

"The theories of the answer were later embodied in three declarations of law, asked on behalf of the defendants, one of which the trial court gave, and two of which it refused to give. The declaration given by the court is as follows: '(3) The court declares the law to be that if the court sitting as a jury should find from the evidence that the four lots respectively described in the four counts of plaintiff's petition are adjacent, that the owners of said property have, in the use thereof, disregarded the lines of said platted lots and have treated the said four lots as one lot, then the portion of the cost of improving Warne avenue, properly assessable against said land of defendants, should have been assessed against said four platted lots as one lot, and the tax bills herein sued upon being assessed against said platted lots, separately, are invalid, and plaintiffs cannot recover thereon.'

"The two declarations refused by the court are as follows: '(4) The court declares the law to be that if the court, sitting as a jury, should find from the evidence that the land described in the four tax bills herein sued upon consists of four lots, as shown by a recorded plat, that said lots as platted fronted on Warne avenue, the street improved, and extended to Mary avenue, the next parallel or converging street; and if the court sitting as a jury should further find that the defendants, owners of the said land, before the improvement of Warne avenue and the issuance of the special tax bills herein sued upon, had by their use of the said lots disregarded the lines of said lots as platted and had used and treated said four lots, or any two or more of them, or fractions thereof, as one lot, and had used the portion of said land so used as one lot as fronting upon Florissant avenue, instead of fronting on said Warne avenue, then the line of the taxing district for the assessment of three-fourths of the cost of improving Warne avenue should, under the provisions of the charter of the city of St. Louis, have been placed midway between said Warne avenue and Mary avenue, the next parallel or converging street on the west of said Warne avenue, in the portion of said platted lots so used as one lot fronting on Florissant avenue, and the court therefore finds that as the said district line was, as to said portion of said land, placed at the east line of said Mary avenue, instead of midway between said Mary avenue and Warne avenue, the said taxing district was not established according to the provisions of the charter of the city of St. Louis, and the tax bills herein sued upon are illegal and void, and the judgment must be for the defendants. (5) The court declares the law to be that if the court, sitting as a jury, should find from the evidence that the tax bills herein sued upon were issued and delivered to plaintiffs on January 5, 1908, and that no installment of any said special tax bills has been paid, and that suit to enforce the collection of said special tax bills was not commenced until the 11th day of January, 1908, then the said special tax bills are barred by limitation.'

"The evidence showed that the property in controversy was bought by defendant Meredith as vacant property, from the Franklin Bank, on October 29, 1897, and that in 1903 he erected on lots 1, 2, and 3 a two-story brick building containing stores and flats; that three of the stores, occupied, respectively, as a millinery shop, a shoe store and a grocery, fronted on Florissant avenue, and only one store, occupied as a butcher shop, fronted on Warne avenue; that the first three stores were numbered on Florissant avenue; and that the flats above the shoe store and grocery were reached from Florissant avenue, that above the millinery shop from Mary, and that above the butcher shop from Warne avenue. There was also testimony that the Florissant avenue side of the building was constructed of better brick than the Mary and Warne avenue sides; that it had an ornamental coping which did not extend around the other sides; that the entire construction indicated that the Florissant avenue side was the front. The evidence further showed that the parts of lots 1, 2, and 3, not built upon, together with lot 4, were used as a common yard by various of the tenants for the storage of wagons, and by all the tenants as a playground for their children, for hanging out the wash, and for other purposes; that all the tenants used a common ashpit, situated on the rear of the premises; and that the butcher and the grocer jointly used a stable built on lots 3 and 4."

We will add to the foregoing statement of counsel that an inspection of the plat in evidence shows that the space occupied on Florissant avenue by the buildings is 62.62 feet, while the space covered by the buildings on Warne avenue is 73.18 feet. The total front of the four lots on Warne avenue is 110.48 feet; on Florissant, 62.62 feet. There are no buildings on Warne avenue on that part of lot 4, 25 feet, or on 12.30 feet of lot 3. Whatever improvements are on lot 4 consist of a frame stable, which covers 27.45 feet of lot 4, and about 12 feet of lot 3, and these are on Mary avenue. The ashpit in the rear of lot 3 is on Mary avenue. The building on the corner of Mary and Florissant avenues, occupied as a millinery store, is 63.35 feet on Mary avenue by 22.35 on Florissant. It should also be noted that, in addition to offering the special tax bills and of the service of notice of the issue of them and demand for payment, a plat showing the lot lines and improvements was in evidence, which was prepared by a draftsman employed in the special tax department of the city of St. Louis, who testified that the lot lines were taken from the official plat book. He also described the character and location of the buildings which he had marked on the plat. There was a stipulation of facts, by which, among other things, it was stipulated: That the plat introduced in evidence is a true and correct plat of lots 1, 2, 3, and 4, in city block 3,545, covering the premises in controversy, and that it correctly shows the boundaries and dimensions of said lots and the location of the improvements thereon; that lots 1, 2, 3, and 4 were conveyed by the Franklin Bank to one Meredith, in 1897, and in the deed of conveyance the lots were described as fronting on Warne avenue; that in 1902 the brick buildings on lots 1, 2, and 3 were erected, and the stable on lots 3 and 4 was erected in 1907; that in 1902 Meredith and wife executed a deed of trust to the Franklin Bank, trustee, in which deed of trust the lots were described as fronting on Warne avenue; that in 1907 the lots were conveyed by Meredith and wife to the defendant Fountain Real Estate & Investment Company, the lots being described in that conveyance as improvements, that the tax bills now in suit had been issued to them; that on January 12, 1906, notice of the issuance of the tax bills had been delivered to the defendant Meredith, the record owner of the property on that date; and that no part of the tax bills had been paid. The eighth clause of the stipulation was to the effect that, prior to and since the improvement of Warne avenue, for which the tax bills were issued, taxes for state, school, and city purposes have been levied and assessed against lots 1, 2, 3, and 4, in city block 3,545, as fronting on Warne avenue, and that the taxes so levied and assessed had been paid by the defendant Meredith. Defendants' counsel objected to this paragraph on the ground that the facts stated were immaterial. The court overruled the objection, and plaintiffs accepted. The files were introduced to show commencement of suit January 11, 1908. The tax bills themselves were in evidence, and defendants introduced testimony tending to prove the use of the lots as one lot, and going fully into the character and location of the buildings; all this evidence being directed to prove that the use of the property was as one lot, although it also appears that the several buildings are occupied by various and different tenants.

At the instance of plaintiffs, the court gave two declarations of law. The first was to the effect that if the tax bills sued on were issued and delivered to plaintiffs on January 5, 1906, and notices of their issue served on defendant Meredith, the record owner of the property in suit, on January 12, 1906, and suit to enforce collection of the special tax bills was commenced on January 11, 1908, then the court declares the law to be that the tax bills are not barred by limitation. The second declaration of law is to the effect that the court declares the law to be that if, sitting as a jury, it finds from the evidence that the property in suit was platted into lots fronting on Warne avenue and extending to Mary avenue, and that the special tax bills were issued against the lots as platted, and that the lots were assessed for general taxes as fronting on Warne avenue, before and after the improvement of that avenue by plaintiffs, and that the taxes so assessed were paid by defendant Meredith, and that after the issuance of the tax bills sued on Meredith conveyed the property to the Fountain Real Estate & Investment Company, and in the deed of conveyance described the lots as fronting on Warne avenue, and if the court further finds from the evidence that, before the improvement of Warne avenue by plaintiffs, a building had been erected on parts of lots 1, 2, and 3, consisting of stores and flats, and that part of the building fronts on Florissant and the remainder on Warne avenue, and that the frame shed or stable on lot 4 was and by the tenant of the butcher shop on Warne avenue, and that the remainder of lots 1, 2, 3, and 4 was used in common by tenants in said building, then the court declares the law to be that the frontage of lots 1, 2, 3, and 4 has not been changed by user from Warne avenue to Florissant avenue, and the special tax bills sued on were properly issued. Exception was saved to the giving of these declarations by the defendants, and, as before noted in this statement, the court gave the third declaration of law asked by defendants, but refused the fourth and fifth. These have been heretofore set out. The first and second declarations of law asked do not appear in the record; but no point is made on their refusal.

There was a finding for plaintiffs and judgment in their favor for the full amount of the bills sued on, with interest, and they were severally adjudged to be liens against the four lots described. Motion for rehearing was filed, overruled, exception saved, and the case brought to this court on appeal by the defendants.

Walther & Muench and David Goldsmith, for appellants. Geo. D. Harris, for respondents.

REYNOLDS, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). While counsel for appellants saved exception to the giving of the declarations of law on behalf of plaintiffs and to the refusal to give two of the three which defendants asked, in presenting the case to us, they make but three points: First, that suit had not been brought on the tax bills within two years after date of the bills; the bills being dated January 5, 1906, the suit having been brought January 11, 1908, and no installments having been ever paid. That the lien had expired under the provisions of section 25, art. 6, of the Charter of St. Louis (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4863). Second, that the purchase of the lots by the defendant Meredith, and the erection of improvements thereon and subsequent use thereof, in total disregard of platted lot lines, made the four lots but one lot, for the purposes of this assessment, and therefore but one tax bill should have been issued against the property, instead of separate bills for each of the original lots. And, third, that the undisputed evidence shows that the improvements erected upon the consolidated lots made up of lots 1, 2, 3, and 4, fronted on Florissant avenue, and it was therefore improper, in defining the taxing district for the improvement of Warne avenue, to include the whole of the lot to Mary avenue. That the line should have been drawn through the property midway between Warne and Mary avenues, so as to include only one-half of the property.

Taking up the propositions involved in the order named, we cannot agree with the contention of the learned and experienced counsel for appellants that the suit is barred on these tax bills by the special limitation in the charter of the city of St. Louis, as amended in 1901. Counsel for appellants cite no authority for this contention, except section 25, art. 6, of the Charter of St. Louis, as amended in 1901. This section 25, art. 6, provides that the special tax bills authorized by the charter, "for the construction or reconstruction of streets, avenues, highways, boulevards or district or joint district sewers, shall be divided into not less than three, nor more than seven, equal parts, as may be provided by the ordinance authorizing such improvements, payable and collectible in installments as follows: The first installment shall become due and payable thirty days after notice of the issuance thereof, without interest; the second installment shall become due and payable one year after such notice; the third installment, two years; the fourth installment, three years; the fifth installment, four years; the sixth installment, five years; and the seventh installment, six years after such notice; provided, however, that the owner or any person having an interest in the property charged with a tax bill may pay the same in full at any time within thirty days after notice as aforesaid, without interest, and such owner or person having an interest may pay such tax bills in full at any time by paying interest thereon as follows: If paid at or before maturity and more than thirty days after notice, as aforesaid, at the rate of six per cent. per annum from date of notice to date of payment; if paid after maturity at the rate of six per cent. per annum from date of notice to date of maturity, and at the rate of eight per cent. per annum from date of maturity to date of payment; all interest shall be payable annually from date of notice of the issuance of tax bills. If any installment of any such special tax bills, or any interest on any installment, be not paid when due, then, at the option of the holder thereof, all remaining installments shall become due and collectible, together with interest thereon as aforesaid. Suits may be brought to enforce the payment of such special tax bills, or any installment or installments thereof, with any interest due on any installment, in the manner herein provided for the bringing of such suits on other special tax bills." Following this is the provision for the limitation of the lien of special tax bills, in which are the following provisions: "Whenever any special tax bill issued heretofore, or hereafter to be issued, to a contractor or contractors, shall be paid, it shall be entered satisfied on the register in the comptroller's office, and the lien of any bills so issued that is not entered satisfied within two years after its maturity, unless proceedings in law shall have been commenced to collect the same within that time, and shall still be pending shall be destroyed and of no effect against the land charged therewith; provided, however, that where bills are not paid in installments, the lien thereof shall terminate within two years after their date, unless such proceedings shall have been commenced within that time and be still pending."

The real contention over this limitation clause turns upon the meaning of the word "paid" in the proviso. To repeat that proviso as written, it is: "That where bills are not paid in installments, the lien thereof shall terminate within two years after their date, unless such proceedings shall have been commenced within that time and be still pending." The date of these bills was January 12, 1906, notice of issue served January 12, 1906, and this action instituted January 11, 1908. Construing the sections together, and having reference to the charter before it was amended, we agree with counsel for respondents that this word "paid," as here used, should be read "payable," so that that proviso would read: "That where bills are not payable in installments, the lien shall terminate within two years after their date." We can give the clause no practical or sensible interpretation, unless it is so read. This section 25 of the charter, as it now stands, distinctly gives the right of payment of these assessments by installments, which "shall be divided into not less than three, nor more than seven, equal parts," the first installment becoming due and payable 30 days after the notice of issue thereof, the second installment becoming due and payable one year after notice, and the subsequent installments becoming due and payable at intervals of one year thereafter, so that the seventh installment is due and payable six years after notice of issue, and, if the bill is divided into seven payments, the last installment would be due and payable about six years after the notice of the tax bills. Therefore, if this proviso is to be read literally, right of action on them would have terminated or their lien would have fallen before they were payable. That cannot be. We may suppose this case: That the debtor owner of the property against whom the tax bill is issued, having the right to pay in seven installments, has paid the first within the 30 days after notice, the second one year after notice, the third two years after notice, the fourth three years after notice, and makes default in the payment of the fifth installment. Thereupon, under the law, the sixth and seventh become due and payable, but the unfortunate holder of the tax bills has then lost his lien and cannot enforce payment of it, because more than two years have elapsed after their date. That applies when the bill has been divided into seven installments, which is the maximum number allowed. Mark that the charter provision is mandatory: "Shall be divided into not less than three, nor more than seven, equal parts." Suppose they are divided into three installments, the minimum. The owner pays the last hour of the last day of the second year has elapsed, and cannot be sued until the beginning of the third year. If sued then, as more than the two years have elapsed, suit is barred, and the lien of that installment of the tax bill lost. Any such construction leads to an absurdity, which most certainly is not to be tolerated any more in the construction of charter provisions and ordinances than in statutory law. Surely no such result was contemplated in the use, in this proviso, of this word "paid." Following the well-settled rule of construction that laws are to be so construed as to give every part of them effect, and to carry out the manifest intention of the framers and makers of them, and so as to avoid an absurd result, we can arrive at no conclusion other than that this particular word "paid," construing it in connection with the whole paragraph, is to be read and construed as if the word "payable" had been used. That construction being applied to the case at bar, the claim made as to this action, being barred, falls, and there was no error in the action of the trial court in refusing to declare the law as asked by the defendants on this branch of the case.

In support of their second proposition, that the user of the lots by the owners made them but one lot for the purposes of this assessment, and that but one tax bill should have been issued against the property, instead of separate bills for each of the original lots, the learned and experienced counsel for defendants cite the charter of the City of St. Louis (article 6, § 14 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 4854]), and these cases: State ex rel. Skrainka v. St. Louis, 211 Mo. 591, loc. cit. 607, 111 S. W. 89; Paving Co. v. Peck, 186 Mo. 506, loc. cit. 516, 85 S. W. 387; Wolfert v. City of St. Louis, 115 Mo. 139, loc. cit. 144, 21 S. W. 912; Kemper v. King, 11 Mo. App. 116; Hill-O'Meara Co. v. Sessinghaus, 106 Mo. App. 163, 80 S. W. 747; Heman Construction Co. v. Loevy, 64 Mo. App. 430. This is the real point in issue; that is, whether the user of the lots made them one lot. If so, the charter not only requires that they be assessed as one lot, but that the line for assessment should have been drawn midway between Warne and Mary avenues, and not at Mary avenue; in brief, only one-half and not all, of their area should have been included for purposes of assessment for the improvement of Warne avenue.

The third proposition advanced by counsel for appellants, that the undisputed evidence in the case shows that the improvements erected upon the consolidated lots, made up of the four lots, had a frontage on Florissant avenue and not on Warne avenue, and that it was therefore improper in defining the taxing district for the improvement on Warne avenue to include the whole of the lot to Mary avenue, but that a line should be timately connected with the above proposition that we will discuss them together. As specifically in support of this, the case of Collier Est. v. Western Pav. & Supply Co., 180 Mo. 362, 79 S. W. 947, is cited. An examination of this, as well as of the other cases above cited, fails to convince us that the action of the lower court in giving and refusing the declarations of law covering this branch of the case, and in finding contrary to the contention of counsel for appellants, was erroneous. With the plat, and with the testimony of the witnesses before it on the question of user, it was a question of fact for the trial court to determine whether the user had changed the lots from four lots, as platted, into one lot. In the instructions given, both for the plaintiffs and the defendants, the trial judge distinctly recognized as law that user could effect such a change; that they must be treated as one for the purposes of the issue of special tax bills, when they are in fact used as one lot. This is an action at law. It was so treated by the court and the parties. Hence the conclusion of the court on the facts, if that conclusion is supported by substantial testimony, is conclusive upon this court. The principles of law announced in the Collier and Skrainka Cases were, in our opinion, followed in this case; the court, in the case at bar, finding, on the facts, that the lots were to be assessed as four lots, and that the evidence of user had not altered the situation. In the Collier Case, on the facts there in evidence, a different conclusion was reached. So that we think that, in disposing of this case, the trial court was in entire harmony with the law as handed down in this and in the other cases cited.

Complaint is made of the refusal to give the declaration of law asked by defendants and marked in the foregoing statement (4). If this case had been tried before a jury, it is possible that defendants would have been entitled to have had that given as an instruction. The parties have a right to have the jury fully instructed on their theory of the law; but this was a trial before the court without a jury, and when it appears, as it does in this case, that the trial judge has a correct conception of the law as applicable to the case on trial, and has correctly applied it, mere failure to give specific declarations, the principle covered by which is embodied in declarations given, is not ground for reversal. It must appear, to warrant reversal for failure to give a declaration of law asked, that the principle covered by the declaration had either not been given in other declarations, or had been incorrectly declared; that the refusal of the declaration shows that the trial judge misconceived the law. That was not the case here. The trial judge recognized through the trial, and by the declarations he did give, the principle covered by this fourth refused instruction.

It is suggested by counsel for respondents, in his very fair argument, that the defense that one tax bill should have been issued, instead of four, was not raised in the answer of appellants, and cannot be considered on appeal. While citing several authorities claimed to be in support of this proposition, counsel very frankly cites us to Cushing v. Powell, 130 Mo. App. 576, loc. cit. 579, 109 S. W. 1054, 1055. An examination of that case shows that in an exceedingly well-considered opinion by Judge Ellison, of the Kansas City Court of Appeals, that learned jurist holds that a defense of the character here referred to is admissible under the general issue. Referring to pleading in connection with these special tax bill cases, Judge Ellison says: "In this case it was necessary for plaintiff to prove that he had a valid lien subject to enforcement against defendant's property. It took, of course, several proper steps or legal proceedings to finally take the form of a tax bill as a valid lien on the defendant's property. The omission of these would prevent the proceeding ripening into a valid tax bill and lien—would show that the lien and bill never had arisen or been brought into existence. Therefore a general denial should let in such evidence." We think that an application of the rule here so clearly set out answers the suggestion of counsel for respondent. This is a minor consideration, however.

We have not undertaken to go into a lengthy discussion or analysis of the cases cited, or into the matter of special tax bills. The law in this state in relation to these matters of street improvements and of the assessment of property for payment thereof may be said to be fairly well settled. It certainly is so far as concerns the main question in this case. Even if we had the power to disturb the finding of the trial court on the question of the weight of evidence, we would not be disposed to do so in a case of this character, having in mind the great importance to the people of the city of St. Louis, and, for that matter, the people of the various cities of the state, in which public improvements are being made, of not only not overturning or disturbing tax bills, on doubtful or debatable grounds, but of holding fast to the law declared. Not only should there be stability of decision in this class of cases, but the bills for public works, issued by public servants, should carry with them at least some presumption that the officers charged with the duty of issuing them have correctly discharged that duty. The contractor does not make out these bills. They are made out by officers of the public. On the ability of the contractors to collect on these bills, when so made, depends, not only the making of improvements themselves, but the cost of the improvements to the property owners, as also the general public. If these tax bills are to be overthrown for slight cause, and on doubtful evidence, or on strained and technical construction of the law itself, the consequences are almost disastrous. They thereby become so discredited and so much under suspicion that responsible parties will be loth to enter upon contracts for public work. Few contractors can carry on great public works entirely with their own funds, and they must borrow. The banks and financial institutions will be loth to loan or to make advances to contractors on account of anticipated payment which must be made out of these tax bills, and the uncertainty connected with the payment of the bills will not only hinder public improvements, but largely enhance the price of these improvements themselves.

If therefore this was a doubtful case on the evidence, and on that the learned trial judge has concluded us, and inasmuch as there is no pretense that this improvement was not made on Warne avenue, and no pretense that it was not made in accordance with contract, and at fair and reasonable prices, and as it was an improvement that undoubtedly went to the enhancement of the value of the property of these defendants, none of which matters, however, are open to inquiry in this case, for it stands on the tax bills alone, we would decline to disturb the finding of the lower court, and it is affirmed. All concur.

WILLIAMSON v. WABASH R. CO.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri.
Nov. 15, 1909. Rehearing Denied
Dec. 6, 1909.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 586*)—POSITIVE AND NEGATIVE TESTIMONY—RELATIVE VALUE.

Probative force is accorded to negative testimony, where the opportunity of the witnesses to receive knowledge of the fact is approximately equal to that of witnesses who give positive testimony concerning it, but where, because of an impaired sense or of an admitted lack of attention, the opportunity of the witness who did not see or hear is not equal to that of a witness who did, the testimony of the former is devoid of evidentiary strength.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2432-2435; Dec. Dig. § 586.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 236*)—INJURY OF SECTION HAND—NEGLIGENCE.

Where plaintiff, a section hand, was upon the track trying to remove a hand car knowing that a regular train was approaching which would assert a right of way over him and his hand car, and there was nothing to keep him on the track but his own heedlessness or preoccupation, and he had not the slightest excuse for remaining there until the train knocked him off, he was negligent as a matter of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 739; Dec. Dig. § 236.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 248*)—INJURY TO SECTION HAND—KNOWLEDGE OF PERIL—HUMANITARIAN DOCTRINE.

When an engineer sees a section hand at work on the track, there is nothing to suggest to the engineer that he is oblivious to his danger, and will not step off in time to avoid being struck, but, where there is that in the appearance of the section hand which indicates the existence of real peril, the engineer should exert himself to avoid injuring the man, and in such a case the humanitarian doctrine is applicable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 801-804; Dec. Dig. § 248.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 289*)—INJURY TO SECTION HAND—KNOWLEDGE OF PERIL—HUMANITARIAN DOCTRINE.

Defendant's engineer while 600 feet away discovered that plaintiff, a section man, had his feet against one of the rails, and his body extended almost horizontally across the track, endeavoring to lift a hand car from the track with his shoulder. Plaintiff's position was extremely awkward, and it would require some time and effort to extract himself. A collision with the hand car could not be avoided, but there was ample time to whistle the danger signal, and, had plaintiff heeded it, he could have escaped. Held that, notwithstanding plaintiff's negligence, he was entitled to go to the jury on the issue of last clear chance negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 1132; Dec. Dig. § 289.*]

5. TRIAL (§ 191*)—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where the court in charging the jury assumed that plaintiff, a section hand, injured from being struck by a train, had no knowledge of the near approach of the train and of his peril, these being controverted facts and both material, the instruction was erroneous, it being a question for the jury whether he was oblivious to his peril, and, if he knew of his peril, the jury might find that he wantonly exposed himself, thereby losing the protection of the humanitarian doctrine.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Randolph County; A. H. Waller, Judge.

Action by William Williamson against the Wabash Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

J. L. Minnis and Robertson & Robertson, for appellant. M. J. Lilly, for respondent.

JOHNSON, J. This suit is for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant. Verdict and judgment were for plaintiff in the sum of $3,500, and the cause is here on the appeal of defendant.

The injury occurred about 5 o'clock p. m. April 13, 1908, at a point on defendant's railroad about 1½ miles south of Cairo. Plaintiff was a section hand in the service of defendant on the section between Cairo and Moberly. The gang had been working about 1,000 feet north of the place of the injury. A south-bound regular freight train, some time overdue, was observed by the foreman to arrive at Cairo, whereupon he ordered some of the men to go for the hand car which was on a dump some distance north. When the men returned with the hand car, the foreman ordered plaintiff and another hand to load the tools on the car, and take it south to another dump. According to the testimony of plaintiff, the foreman said: "You take this hand car down there, and put the tools on it, and set it off the track, but put all the tools on it first and set it off. No. 70 (the freight train) is up there. I think you have plenty of time." In obedience to this order, plaintiff and his fellow workman, after the car was loaded, ran it down to the place indicated, and proceeded to remove it to the dump which was on the west side of the track. They lifted and pushed the forward end of the car around to the dump, and then plaintiff went around to the rear end to push the car westward until it would clear the track. To do this he was compelled to take a position between the rails. In pushing the car westward the rear wheels became stuck or obstructed in some way, retarding the clearing of the track. Plaintiff testified: "I was trying to get the car off the track, and I had my head down kinda, and was trying to lift the car up, and it got caught some way. I don't know how. I had my head down looking under the car trying to raise it up. I was trying to raise the car up to get it off the track, * * * and the first thing I knew I didn't know nothing." At this time the locomotive collided with the hand car, and plaintiff was struck and severely injured. In their argument on the demurrer to the evidence counsel for defendant earnestly contend that plaintiff was guilty of negligence in law which directly caused or at least contributed to his injury; and, further, they argue that the facts and circumstances in their aspect most favorable to plaintiff disclose no cause of action under the "humanitarian doctrine."

Facts and circumstances in evidence which are pertinent to the questions argued thus may be stated: Plaintiff says, in substance, that he did not see the train at any time, did not know it was so near at hand when he was striving to push the hand car off the track, and did not hear any warning of its approach. He does admit the foreman told him the train was coming, and on cross-examination testified: "Q. You were working as fast as you could? A. Supposed to be. Q. What were you taking that car off for? A. For No. 70. Q. No. 70 that was coming? A. Yes, sir." The dump to which plaintiff was trying to move the hand car was quite near the whistling post for a road crossing some distance south. All the witnesses introduced by plaintiff, except plaintiff himself and one other, state the whistle sounded the road crossing signal when the locomotive was about 600 feet north of the dump. Plaintiff and this witness say they did not hear the whistle, but plaintiff attempts to exonerate himself from the imputation of neglecting his own safety by the claim that he had become engrossed in his work, and the other witness admitted on cross-examination that he is "pretty hard of hearing," and "was absorbed in his work." The country through which the train was running is an open prairie, and the train was going up a slight grade in approaching the hand car. At the point where the engine whistled for the crossing there is a slight curve in the track. The engineer introduced as a witness testified: "As I approached the curve, I could see right straight across, and could see the whistling board, and could see the hand car setting on the dump and the whistling board in the middle, setting in the middle, and that put me of the opinion that it was in the clear. As I approached a little closer, I saw that it was not in the clear, and I went around the curve a little bit further and saw this hand car, about 600 feet from the whistling board, and the very minute I saw the man on the track, and he was laying down with his left shoulder against the hand car and his feet up against the opposite rail, trying to push the hand car over, and, as soon as I seen him, I shut off the steam, and put on the emergency, and give the whistle, two longs and two shorts. He was laying with his left shoulder against that hand car, and looking me straight in the eye. Q. When you saw him in that position, you did what, Mr. Moeller? A. Shut off the steam, throwed the brake and emergency, and give the whistle. Q. Two longs and two shorts, I believe you said? A. Yes, sir. Q. How far were you from the men when you gave the whistle? A. 500 or 600 feet. Q. How far was you when you got through giving the whistle? A. I judge I would be 400 or 500 feet. I suppose I must have run about that. Q. The car was cross-ways the track, and he was down with his feet against the opposite rail? A. With his shoulder against the hand car. Q. He was shoving, and he had his face turned toward the engine? A. Yes, sir; looking me in the eye. Q. Did you stop as quick as you could? A. Yes, sir. Q. Well. A. When I found out that he was not going to get off the track, I stuck my head out of the window and waved at him and hollered at him as loud as I could, and then he raised to his feet, and, instead of going this way (indicating), he backed up, and I went underneath the car with the pilot and struck him. * * * Q. When he was on the ground as you have testified that he was, with his feet against the rail and his shoulder against the hand car, you were only 60 feet from him, 60 feet away? A. Just about; yes. Q. How long had he been in that position? A. He was trying to push the hand car. Q. Was that the position in which you first discovered him? A. Yes, sir. Q. After you discovered his peril, instead of continuing to sound the whistle, you stuck your head out of the cab and hollered at him. A. I hollered and whistled for him." Other witnesses for plaintiff who were paying close attention deny that any warning was given by the whistle after the crossing signal.

We shall assume, as conclusively proved by evidence introduced by plaintiff, that the crossing signal was given when the locomotive was not more than 600 feet from the hand car, and was in plain view. The statements of plaintiff and his witness of defective hearing are valueless, and cannot be suffered to raise an issue of fact. We accord probative force to negative testimony where the opportunity of the witnesses to receive knowledge of the fact is approximately equal to that of witnesses who give positive testimony concerning it. Butler v. Railway, 117 Mo. App. 354, 93 S. W. 877. But where, because of an impaired sense or of an admitted lack of attention, it is apparent that the opportunity of the witness who did not see or hear is unequal to that of the witness who did see or hear, the testimony of the former should be rejected as wholly devoid of evidentiary strength. The rule thus is stated in 2 Moore on Facts, § 1188: "If a credible witness with apparently adequate opportunity for observation testifies to the occurrence of a fact, no conflict arises by the testimony of other witnesses that they were cognizant of the occurrence, where the latter witnesses' opportunities for observation are not stated, or where it affirmatively appears that their situation was such or their attention was so engrossed with other matters that they probably would not have observed the fact if it had occurred, or where their opportunities were not co-extensive with those of the witnesses who testify positively to the fact." But we shall treat as an issue of fact the statement of the engineer that he sounded the whistle when the engine was about 60 feet from the hand car, since that statement is contradicted by the testimony of witnesses who were giving attention and whose opportunity to know the real fact was equal to that of the engineer. Therefore, for the purposes of the demurrer to the evidence, we shall assume that the crossing signal was given, and that the whistle was not sounded again before the collision. That the peril of plaintiff was created by his own negligence is a conclusion not open to serious doubt. As a section hand it was his duty to be on the lookout for trains, and to keep out of their way, and he "had no right to become so engrossed in his work as to become heedless of his danger and as not to take proper precautions to observe the approach of trains." Sissel v. Railroad, 214 Mo., loc. cit. 523, 113 S. W. 1107; Clancy v. Transit Co., 192 Mo., loc. cit. 657, 91 S. W. 522. The prime object of the operators of a railroad is—or at least should be—the service of the public. The business is highly complex, and calls for a strict adherence to system and discipline. Trains in the service of the public must be run on schedule, and not be impeded by track ing, and that the accident was caused by the negligence of the engineer over him and his hand car. There was nothing to keep him on the track but his own heedlessness or preoccupation, and he had not the slightest excuse for remaining there until the train knocked him off. His peril was the result of his own negligence.

But counsel for plaintiff have not made the mistake of basing their cause of action on negligence that might be made innocuous by contributory negligence. They argue that their client acted in a proper manner, but in the petition, evidence, and instructions they plant plaintiff's case squarely on the humanitarian doctrine; and the principal question for our decision is whether or not they have made out a case under the principle and rules of that doctrine. Were it not for the testimony of the engineer, we would declare that plaintiff had no case. As was said by the Supreme Court in Evans v. Railroad, 178 Mo., loc. cit. 517, 77 S. W. 518, quoted approvingly in Sissel v. Railroad, supra: "It will not do to apply this rule in all its strictness to sectionmen whose business it is to work upon and keep in repair railroad tracks, for they are supposed to look after their own personal safety, and to know of the time at which trains pass, to look for them and see them, and to move out of the way. It is of common knowledge that these men often voluntarily wait until trains get dangerously close to them, and then step out of danger and let them pass by, and to require trains to stop upon all such occasions when sectionmen are discovered at work on the track would not only be imposing upon railroads unjust burdens, but would greatly interfere with traffic and travel." When an engineer sees a section hand at work on the track and has good reason to believe the man is aware of the approach of the train, there is in the bare fact that the man remains on the track until the very last instant nothing to suggest to the engineer that he is oblivious to his danger, and will not step off in time to avoid being struck; but, whenever there is that in the appearance of the section hand that would indicate the existence of real peril, the engineer should exert himself to avoid injuring the man. In such situation the facts that the man is a section hand, and, in the exercise of his duty, should get out of the way, sink into insignificance, and give way to the all controlling fact that a human being is in peril, and the engineer has the means at hand for saving him. The engineer says that, when plaintiff was 600 feet away, he discovered that plaintiff had his feet planted against the east rail and his body extended looking towards the train, but, be this as it may, plaintiff was in an extremely awkward position, one from which it would require some time and effort to extricate himself. He was not in the situation of a person who has but a step or two to take to reach safety, and we think it was for the jury to say whether or not there was an appearance of peril to a reasonably careful and humane man in the position of the engineer. If there was, the engineer should have made reasonable use of the means at his command to save this foolish person. It appears that he could not avoid a collision with the hand car, but it also appears that he had ample opportunity to whistle the danger signal. Had he done so, the inference is reasonable that plaintiff would have heeded the warning and escaped. We conclude that, despite his own negligence, plaintiff was entitled to go to the jury on the issue of last chance negligence.

But the judgment must be reversed and the cause remanded on account of prejudicial error in the first instruction given at the request of plaintiff. In that instruction the court assumes as proved the fact that plaintiff had no knowledge of the near approach of the train and of his peril. These were controverted facts and both were material. If, as the engineer says, plaintiff was looking at the approaching train and had time to escape, it is, at least, a question of fact for the jury whether he was oblivious to his peril; and, if he had knowledge of the real extent of his peril, his act in remaining therein would entitle the jury to find that he wantonly exposed himself to a danger of which he had full knowledge and from which he could have escaped. The beneficial principle of the humanitarian doctrine is for the protection of the negligent and careless, and not of the wanton. To illustrate, suppose a man were to throw himself in front of a train with the intention of committing suicide, would not conclusive proof of that fact end all question of responsibility, regardless of whether or not the engineer might have stopped the train? And in this case it may be asked—and there could be but one answer to the question—what would have been the use of signaling a danger to plaintiff of the existence of which he already had full knowledge? The facts assumed by the court were of the very marrow of the case, and should have been included among the facts in issue.

For this error, the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded. All concur.

1. DIVORCE (§ 298*)—CUSTODY OF CHILDREN—PARAMOUNT CONSIDERATION.

In awarding the custody of children in divorce proceedings, the wishes of the parents should only receive a subordinate consideration; the paramount consideration being the welfare of the child.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 781; Dec. Dig. § 298.*]

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 278*)—CONTRACT OF SEPARATION—ENFORCEABILITY.

A contract between husband and wife, by which they agree to live apart and which disposes of the custody of the children, will not be enforced.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 1046-1053; Dec. Dig. § 278.* Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 515, 517.]

3. DIVORCE (§ 312*)—APPEAL—CROSS-PETITION—ALLEGATIONS—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where the husband's cross-petition in a suit for divorce alleged many acts of misconduct on the part of the wife, but did not specifically charge adultery, it will be presumed, on the wife's appeal from a modification of the decree as to custody of the children, that the decree given the husband did not include a finding that the wife was an adulteress.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. § 312.*]

4. WORDS AND PHRASES—FITNESS OF PARENT—"DEPRAVED."

A person is depraved when he is generally bad, is wicked in mind and heart, loves evil rather than good, and, though a single act of adultery may be considered strong evidence of depravity, it is not conclusive.

5. DIVORCE (§ 298*)—CUSTODY OF CHILDREN—DEPRIVITY OF PARENT.

Plaintiff, a divorced woman, spent the two nights previous to her marriage with her present husband in a hotel with him; they having registered as husband and wife. Since her marriage she had been leading a good life. Held, that her relation with her present husband should be regarded as a single transgression, and not such a manifestation of a depraved disposition, as to render her unfit to retain the custody of an 11 year old daughter of the former marriage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 784; Dec. Dig. § 298.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Carroll County; John P. Butler, Judge.

Laura Knepper, now Laura Knepper Huckleberry, against Frank Knepper. From a judgment modifying a decree of divorce, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

James F. Graham and Jones & Conkling, for appellant. Lozler, Morris & Atwood, for respondent.

JOHNSON, J. The issue before us is raised by the divorced parents of Allie Knepper, a female minor, now 11 years old. The appeal is prosecuted by the mother from a judgment modifying the decree of divorce in which the custody of the child was awarded the mother. After their marriage, the parties lived together as husband and wife until February and a girl, established her home at Bosworth. Before the separation, the parties lived on a farm south of Bosworth. They sold the farm to J. C. Huckleberry, and also disposed of their personal property preparatory to the separation. On the 15th of February, 1907, they entered into a written contract by the terms of which they agreed to live apart, and settled all questions relating to the division of their property. That contract contained the agreement that the mother should have the custody of the children for two years, after which she should retain the little girl, and the boy should go to the father. Plaintiff then instituted the present suit. In the petition she alleged certain indignities committed against her by defendant, and prayed for a divorce, and for the custody of the children, but did not pray for alimony. Defendant filed an answer and cross-petition, in which he alleged acts of misconduct on the part of plaintiff, chiefly acts which, if true, inculpated plaintiff with Huckleberry. When the cause came to trial in September, 1907, plaintiff dismissed her petition, the court heard the evidence introduced by defendant, and decreed "that the defendant, Frank Knepper, be divorced from the bonds of matrimony contracted with the plaintiff, Laura Knepper, and be forever freed from the obligations of said marriage. It is further ordered that plaintiff, Laura Knepper, have the care and custody of Allie Knepper, minor child born of said marriage, and that defendant have the care and custody of Warren Knepper, minor child born of said marriage, and that each party pay one-half the costs." On March 18, 1908, defendant filed a petition for review, in which he prays that he be given the custody of the daughter on the ground of the moral turpitude of the mother, and alleges that, since the decree of divorce was rendered, plaintiff has been guilty of immoral conduct with Huckleberry. A trial of the issues presented by this petition and plaintiff's reply resulted in a judgment awarding the custody of the child to defendant "on condition that the latter obtain a suitable home for said child and shall pay the necessary expenses for its maintenance; it further appearing that said Frank Knepper has secured a home for said child at the home of Richard Morris, and that said Richard Morris and wife are suitable persons to have the care and custody of said child." It is provided that the children shall be permitted to visit plaintiff once every month, and that plaintiff may visit them on suitable occasions.

The evidence adduced by defendant tends to establish the following facts: Defendant and Huckleberry were neighboring farmers. Huckleberry became a frequent visitor at defendant's home, and an intimacy sprang up between him and Mrs. Knepper. Defendant's he outwardly preserved a friendly attitude toward the man he now claims defiled his home. Most of the visits of Huckleberry were either on the express or implied invitation of defendant. The excuse offered for such complaisance is that defendant was so cowed by his wife that he acquiesced in her plans for the companionship of Huckleberry even when his mind had become charged with suspicion that his wife's affections were being alienated from him. After the separation, Huckleberry frequently called on Mrs. Knepper at her home in Bosworth. Neighbors saw his horse or team hitched in front of the house, and the tongue of gossip wagged furiously. In the following January, Huckleberry and Mrs. Knepper left Bosworth to be married in Kentucky. They went to Carrollton by different trains, and boarded a train at Carrollton for St. Louis, where they arrived at 11 o'clock at night. They went to a hotel, and Huckleberry registered them as husband and wife. They went to the room assigned them, where, according to the testimony of plaintiff, Huckleberry remained for an hour "talking business" with her, and then went to another hotel. The next night they spent at a hotel in Louisville, and again Huckleberry registered them as man and wife. Plaintiff says she permitted her companion to remain in the room that night because she was ill, and, besides, she "knew how to take care of herself." The next day they were married, and, after visiting relatives in Kentucky, they returned to Bosworth, and went to live on the farm Huckleberry had purchased from defendant. Defendant introduced a great number of witnesses, who testified that plaintiff's reputation for chastity in Bosworth and vicinity is bad, but without exception each admitted that this reputation is based solely on plaintiff's conduct with her present husband. The evidence is overwhelming that, with the exception of this conduct, plaintiff always has behaved with propriety, and that since her marriage with Huckleberry she has been faithful to her husband and child. She and the little girl are full of affection for each other. The mother has supported the child in a manner befitting their station, has sent her to school and to Sunday school, has given her instruction in music, and, in general, has surrounded her with the comforts and blessings of a mother's love. Further, it appears beyond dispute that Huckleberry is a hard-working, sober farmer, who, but for the offense of courting another man's wife, has lived an uneventful and blameless life. He is in fairly good circumstances, and appears to be able and willing to provide a good home for the child. On the other hand, defendant, though able to support his children, has no home, and must, perforce, intrust them to the care of others.

This child is the ward of the court, and her welfare is the paramount consideration.

sires and feelings of the warring natural parents, and will do for the child that which will best serve to promote her true welfare. If we thought the mother so depraved that the moral nature of the child would be contaminated by unwholesome environment, we would not hesitate to tear the child from her for its own good. The feelings of the parents should be considered in such cases, but only as a subordinate consideration. What will best serve the little girl whose destiny will be so greatly affected by our decision? The father certainly is far from being an attractive personage. He stood by with his eyes open and watched another man win the heart of his wife without offering even a word of protest, and now pleads his own weakness as an excuse for such unmanly conduct. He believed his wife unfaithful when he entered into the contract of separation, and yet in the face of that belief agreed that she might keep the little girl. He even sold his homestead to his despoiler. Evidently he thought more of his property interests than he did of the welfare of his child. It is true this contract could not bind the courts, but it does bring into strong relief the character of the man who asks us to disregard his attempt to contract away his child, and to give him its custody, though he believed as much against the character of his wife when he made that contract as he knows now. Moreover, he has no home, does not propose to establish one, and will do no better than to pay the board of the child in some one else's home—a poor prospect, indeed, for a girl of tender years who most of all needs the moral and physical nourishment of a mother's love. We find ourselves unable to avoid the conclusion that defendant is not actuated so much by parental solicitude for the well-being of the child as he is by a motive of revenge against his former wife. That motive obtrudes throughout the record, and we shall have to find the mother's conduct so bad as to denote depravity—I. e., an inherent deficiency of moral sense and rectitude—before we shall give our consent to the affirmance of a judgment that would give a tender girl into the keeping of such a father.

The cross-petition for a divorce alleges many acts of misconduct on the part of plaintiff with Huckleberry, but it does not specifically charge her with adultery, and we shall assume from this omission that the decree given defendant does not necessarily include the finding that plaintiff was an adulteress. Turning to the evidence in the record before us, we find ample proof of the fact that, before the separation, plaintiff was guilty of the grave offense against the marital relation of receiving and reciprocating the attentions of a man other than her husband, but we do not believe she went to the length of committing adultery. When her affections became alienated from her husing marriage with Huckleberry, who was in a position to marry her. Such conduct cannot be reprobated too strongly. The law exacts fidelity to the marital relation, and, though we believe defendant stupidly contributed to the demolition of his home, we find plaintiff was guilty of a flagrant outrage against the most sacred of human institutions. Further, we find that, while on her way to be married to Huckleberry, she was guilty of immoral conduct at the hotels where they stopped in St. Louis and Louisville. Her attempted exculpatory excuses will not go. "Finding persons in such a situation as presumes guilt generally, courts must presume it in all cases attended with those circumstances." Jennings v. Jennings, 85 Mo. App. 290. We have stated everything of consequence that reflects on the moral character of plaintiff. An attempt was made to show an improper relation between her and a married man at Bosworth, but the attempt fell flat. Stress also was laid on the fact that she associated with a woman of questionable character in Bosworth, but it turned out that she merely employed the woman to work for her while she was ill. The woman was engaged in domestic service, and had been employed by and received in the homes of respectable people, including some of the accusing witnesses. There is nothing in that incident to cast reproach on plaintiff. We find in her an entire absence of immoral conduct and propensity except in the matter of her relation with her present husband. Before the beginning of that relation, she lived the life of a good woman, and since her marriage has held herself beyond reproach.

Counsel for defendant invoke the general rule applicable to an adulterous mother in cases of this character. It has been said that: "A woman who has been guilty of adultery is unfit to have the care and education of children, and more especially of female children." 2 Bishop on Marriage, Divorce and Separation, § 1198. But in the same paragraph the author says: "A single act of adultery not repeated and not likely to be, whether by father or mother, has been deemed not necessarily to deprive forever the delinquent of the custody." In the case of In re Steele, 107 Mo. App. 567, 81 S. W. 1182, much relied on by defendant, we said: "The relator has been shown to be guilty of adultery, and, though she is the mother, yet her abhorrent conduct of itself affords the strongest reasons for refusing her application for the custody, society, and association of the child." But the facts in that case differ in material respects from those before us, and indicated to us that the mother was morally depraved. A single transgression of the moral law does not necessarily betoken depravity. A person is depraved when he is generally depraved, it is not conclusive. We are disposed to regard the relation of plaintiff with her present husband prior to their marriage as a single transgression, and not as the manifestation of a disposition to evil. We believe she is a good woman at heart, and a good mother, and that her transgression was due not to wantonness, but to a passion weakly resisted, and suffered to grow and ripen by the fatuous conduct of defendant. Now that she is married, and is leading a good life, we think her mother love which appears to be strong will assert itself and that the child will not be surrounded by a morally impure atmosphere. We shall leave the child for the present with her, believing that the benign results of a mother's care and love will be greater than any evil influence likely to be born of the mother's past offense. But we place plaintiff on probation, and, should she backslide again, it will be at the cost of losing her child.

In answer to the argument that the social ostracism of plaintiff will include the child, we find that this exclusion from respectable social intercourse is not so extensive as counsel describe it. Many good citizens of Bosworth appeared as witnesses for plaintiff and defended her. Further, it appears that the vulture gossip has picked the bones of this scandal clean, and it is reasonable to presume it will turn to other carrion—of which, unhappily, a sufficient supply is never wanting. We perceive no reason for thinking the child will be deprived of healthful companionship.

The judgment is reversed. All concur.

PALMER v. REEVES & CO.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri.
Nov. 15, 1909. Rehearing Denied
Dec. 6, 1909.)

1. SALES (§ 441*)—BREACH OF WARRANTY—EVIDENCE.

In an action for a breach of warranty in the sale of certain farm machinery, evidence held to require a finding that the machine failed to answer the purpose intended.

2. SALES (§ 285*) — FARM MACHINERY — BREACH OF WARRANTY — REGISTERED NOTICE.

A provision in a contract for the sale of farm machinery, requiring notice of a failure of the machine to comply with the warranty by registered letter, was waived, where defendant received a nonregistered letter of complaint and acted thereon by sending one of its agents to rectify the defects.

4. SALES (§ 62*)—FARM MACHINERY—RETURN.

Where defendant sold plaintiff a clover huller, feeder, and stacker, all constituting parts of a machine needed for the complete accomplishment of the objects intended, the contract was not divisible in the sense that defendant could refuse to accept a return of the feeder and stacker because the huller did not work satisfactorily, under a contract providing for a return of the machine in case it did not do good work after a satisfactory trial.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Boone County; A. H. Walker, Judge.

Action by John Palmer against Reeves & Co. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

C. B. Sebastian and W. M. Williams, for appellant. Charles J. Walker, for respondent.

BROADDUS, P. J. This is an action for a breach of warranty by the defendant upon the sale of a certain machine, consisting of a clover huller, feeder, and stacker. The contract was entered into on September 9, 1905, and the machine was delivered on September 11th, two days thereafter. The contract provided for a payment of $300 cash on delivery, and $250 to be paid on the 1st day of November, evidenced by a note of plaintiff and secured by chattel mortgage on the property. The contract contained the following warranty: "The machinery ordered is to be well made, of good material, and, with proper care and management, to do as good work as any other machine of the same size and manufactured for a like purpose." The plaintiff paid the $300 and gave his note for the $250, as specified in the contract, and executed a mortgage on the machine to secure the payment of the note. After the recitation of the warranty, the writing further reads: "But if inside of six days from the day of its first use, the said machinery fails to fill its warranty, written notice shall be given Reeves & Co. by registered letter, and also written notice to the local agent from whom the same was purchased, stating wherein it fails to fill the warranty, and if it be of such a nature that remedy cannot be suggested by letter, a reasonable time shall be allowed to remedy the defects, if any there be, and an opportunity offered for a trial thereafter, the purchaser rendering necessary and friendly assistance. Defects or failures in one part shall not condemn any other part of attached machine, and if, after a fair opportunity to remedy a defect, the part or parts containing such cannot be nish another machine, or part, in place of the machine or part so returned, or credit the settlement of the same. If Reeves & Co. shall furnish another machine or part in place of the one returned, the terms of this warranty shall be held to be fulfilled and the company shall be subject to no further liability under this order. It is hereby expressly agreed that all claims for damages against Reeves & Co. by reason of nonperformance of machinery are hereby waived. It is mutually agreed that the failure of the purchaser to give said written notice of defects, as above provided, within six days from the day of its first use, or to return the said machinery or part to the place where it was received within six days from the day of its first use, shall be conclusive evidence of the fulfillment of the warranty and the full satisfaction to the purchaser, who agrees to make no claim thereafter against Reeves & Co., or to make any defense to the notes given therefor on account of any breach of the warranty. It is also expressly agreed that if, at any time after the expiration of the six days from the date of its first use, Reeves & Co., should furnish to the purchaser any improvements or attachments for said machinery, or replace any old parts with new, or should the purchaser notify Reeves & Co. in any wise whatever, of any imperfection in said machinery, and if upon receipt of such notice Reeves & Co., or any agent or employé, should act thereon and remedy, or attempt to remedy, such imperfections, the so doing of all such acts will not extend the liability of Reeves & Co., under this warranty beyond the six days from the day of the first use." There are other iron-clad provisions in the writing which it is not necessary to notice.

The machine was first put in use on the 22d day of September. One of defendant's agents was present to start it, but it failed to do good work. He claimed that the clover was too wet, and that he would have to wait until it should get dry, and promised to come back later. He returned on the 26th, and failed again to make the machine do good work. It was then moved to another farm, where it was started, to work again by defendant's agent on the 27th of September; but it failed again to do proper work. On the 28th, the next day, plaintiff endeavored to run the machine without the aid of defendant's agent; but it still failed to act so as to do good work. Whereupon, on the same day, he called up the defendant's agent then in Columbia, and told him the machine would not do good work. On the same day he wrote a letter addressed to the company at its home office stating that the machine would not do good work, specifying wherein it failed. This letter was not registered. On September 30th defendant answered acknowledging receipt of his letter, and informed plaintiff that the matter would be referred to the Kansas City office, where it would receive prompt attention. On the 29th of September the defendant's agent came back, and, after testing the machine, said he had done all he could, and that it was doing as well as it could under the conditions. On the next day, the 30th of September, plaintiff again wrote to defendant stating that he had given the clover huller a fair trial, that he had tried to use it for five days, that its agent had failed to make it work successfully, again stating the defect, and asked what he should do with it, as he wished to return it, demanding that defendant return the $300 he had paid. On the 2d day of October defendant acknowledged the receipt of this letter, stating that the matter would be referred to the Kansas City office, and further: "We don't know whether or not the terms of warranty on the machine has expired, but would state that we are not very particular about a thing of that sort, desiring always to look after our customers in proper shape." On the 3d of October the agent of defendant at Kansas City wrote to plaintiff that the huller, if handled properly, would do the work as guaranteed, and that: "We have your order in which the guaranty is fully set forth, and we have your settlement, and unless we learn something to the contrary as to the working of the huller from what we now know, the guaranty has been absolutely fulfilled, and you have no complaint. * * * Your note for $250 will be due November 1st, and we expect the same will be met promptly when due." The plaintiff did nothing more in the way of returning the machine. When the note became due, the mortgage was foreclosed, and at the sale defendant became the purchaser. The finding and judgment were for the defendant, and plaintiff appealed. There were no declarations of law asked or given by the court, and no finding of facts. The case is therefore here upon the whole record.

There can be little or no dispute but that the machine failed to answer the purpose intended. The evidence is all one way. It is true the defendant's agent claimed that the clover was too wet for the machine to operate successfully; but it was tried upon different material, at different times and places, with the same result. The language of the warranty is not limited in its application to any particular condition of the clover to be hulled as to dryness or dampness. If such was the intention, defendant should have specified in that particular. From the very nature of things, it may be safely inferred that the condition of clover after it is harvested is subject to change of temperature and the condition of the atmosphere. If the atmosphere be warm and damp, the clover would be affected thereby, and to some extent would be damp. On the contrary, if the weather is fair and the atmosphere dry, the clover would necessarily be drier. At the time plaintiff first attempted to use the machine under the supervision of defendant's agent, it is claimed, as we have seen, that the clover was wet, and at all the subsequent trials it is claimed that the same condition existed. It is to be concluded from these facts that the huller would only perform good work while the clover was in a certain condition as to being dry. Just how dry it does not appear. The contract does not say. It seems to us that a machine that would not work well under ordinary conditions as to dampness or dryness of the material would, in this climate, be very uncertain and unsatisfactory, and would be of little, or at least uncertain, value; but, as the contract does not include any such specification, the matter need not be further noticed.

The plaintiff's failure to give notice to the local agent, and to the corporation by registered letter, was waived by the defendant, who actually received the letter and acted upon the notice therein contained by sending one of its agents for the purpose of rectifying the defect. "Every purpose of a registered letter was accomplished by the letter received, as defendant acted upon it." Buchanan v. Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. (N. D.) 116 N. W. 335; Hein v. Milderbrandt, 134 Wis. 582, 115 N. W. 121; Harrison v. Russell, 12 Idaho, 624, 87 Pac. 784.

After defendant notified plaintiff, in effect, that it would not rescind the contract, and that it would hold him to its terms, he was not bound to return the machine to the agent at Columbia. It amounted to a waiver of a return of the machine. Walls v. Gates, 4 Mo. App. 1; Osborne v. Mullikin, 88 Mo. App. 350. The rule is succinctly stated in Padden v. Marsh, 34 Iowa, 522, that: "Where, by the terms of a warranty under which a reaping machine was sold, it was stipulated that, in case it failed to work as warranted, it was to be returned by the purchaser to a particular place, it was held that a notification by the seller to the buyer that he would not receive the machine back excused the buyer from making an effort to return it." But it is insisted that plaintiff should at least have returned the defective part of the machine and give defendant the option either to refund its value or substitute machinery that would fill the warranty. It is held, on a similar contract: "That in case of a breach of warranty the buyer should immediately return the defective machinery, and the seller should have the option either to furnish another machine, or return the purchase money, the buyer was bound to elect within a reasonable time whether he would return the machinery and claim cancellation of the purchase-money notes or the delivery of proper machinery in lieu of that found deficient, and his failure to do so waived the breach." Gaar, Scott & Co. v. Hodges (Ky.) 90 S. W. 580. And so is it held in Heagney v. J. I. Case Threshing Machine Co., 4 Neb. (Unof.) 745, 96 N. W. 175. These cases are not in conflict with those last cited, because there was no waiver in either of the provisions of the contract for a return of the machine, and the conclusions only amount to declarations that the purchaser must comply with the stipulations contained in the guaranties, a conclusion which is not to be denied.

It was argued that as the contract was divisible, defendant was under no obligation to take back any part of the machine that fulfilled the contract; that is to say, if there were no defects in the stacker and feeder, the plaintiff was bound by the contract to keep them. It is true these were divisible parts of the machine, which, had either proved defective, the defendant upon notice had the right to remedy, yet respondent has left out of consideration that these divisible parts went to constitute the whole, and that without the huller they were of no value whatever to plaintiff. What use could he have had for a feeder without the huller to receive the feed, or what material could he have had to stack until the clover passed through the huller, are matters which the agreement has left out of consideration.

We believe the finding and judgment is not sustained by the evidence and the law, for which reason the cause is reversed and remanded. All concur.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§§ 979, 1015*) — AWARDED NEW TRIAL—REVIEW.

On appeal from a judgment awarding a new trial on the ground that the verdict for defendant is against the weight of the evidence, the court will not interfere with the discretion of the trial judge, unless the petition fails to state a cause of action, or plaintiff's proof is insufficient to raise an issue for the jury, and the court will not weigh the evidence except to determine whether that most favorable to the cause of action asserted is substantial.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 812*) — DEFECTIVE STREETS—NOTICE OF INJURY—SUFFICIENCY.

Rev. St. 1899, § 5724 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2909), requiring the giving of notice of the time, place, character, and circumstances of an injury on a defective street, must be construed reasonably, and, though one will not be permitted to thwart the intent of the statute by indefiniteness when the true facts may be clearly stated, a notice which gave the officers information which cannot mislead, but which will enable them to locate the defect, is sufficient, though it fails to state the exact place where the injury was received.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1702; Dec. Dig. § 812.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 812*) — DEFECTIVE STREETS—NOTICE OF INJURY—SUFFICIENCY.

A notice of injury to a pedestrian on a defective sidewalk, which stated that the injury occurred while the pedestrian was walking on the sidewalk on the north side of the street in a block between designated streets, that the sidewalk was out of repair because the stringers had become rotten and the earth underneath them had been washed away, causing the sidewalk to tilt from the horizontal, sufficiently informed the city of the place of the injury within Rev. St. 1899, § 5724 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2909), where the evidence shows that the west half of the block of the sidewalk was defective as described.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1702; Dec. Dig. § 812.*]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 800*) — DEFECTIVE SIDEWALKS—NEGLIGENCE—LIABILITY.

The negligence of a city in maintaining a sidewalk which had sagged down by the washing away of the earth and the rotting of the stringers, so as to cause it to slope sharply, was the proximate cause of the injury to a pedestrian slipping thereon while the walk was wet and slippery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1666-1671; Dec. Dig. § 800.*]

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 821*) — DEFECTIVE SIDEWALKS—INJURIES TO PEDESTRIANS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

A city maintaining a sidewalk on only one side of an unpaved street impliedly invites one living on property abutting the sidewalk to use it, and the issue of his contributory negligence is for the jury, unless the court can declare as a matter of law that the sidewalk was so glaringly dangerous that a reasonably prudent person would have refused to encounter the danger.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Buchanan County; Henry M. Ramey, Judge.

Action by Anna M. Snickles against the City of St. Joseph. Verdict for defendant, and, from a judgment awarding a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. B. Norris and O. E. Shultz, for appellant. P. J. Carolus, for respondent.

JOHNSON, J. This is an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff from falling on a board sidewalk in St. Joseph, a city of the second class. Plaintiff alleges that her injuries were caused by the negligence of defendant. The verdict of the jury was for the defendant, but the trial court sustained plaintiff's motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of the evidence. Defendant appealed from the judgment awarding a new trial.

we find either that the petition fails to state a cause of action, or that the proof adduced by the plaintiff is insufficient to raise an issue to go to the triers of fact. We do not weigh the evidence, except for the purpose of determining whether that most favorable to the cause of action asserted is substantial. Defendant recognizes this rule, but contends that plaintiff has failed to make out a case for the jury, and argues, first, that the notice of the injury given defendant was fatally defective for the reason that it failed to state the place of the injury with sufficient definiteness; second, that the evidence most favorable to plaintiff fails to accuse defendant of negligence; and, third, that it does show that the injury was the direct result of plaintiff's own negligence. Should we find that any of these contentions is well taken, a proper case would be presented for our interference with the action of the trial court in granting a new trial.

The evidence of plaintiff discloses the following state of facts: The injury occurred early in the morning of August 28, 1907, on Hammond street, between Lookout street and Swift avenue, all public streets of the city. Hammond street runs east and west, the other named streets north and south. Hammond street was not paved, but some grading had been done on it by the city. A board sidewalk was maintained on the north side of the street. A deep gully separated the sidewalk from the roadway, and there was no sidewalk on the south side of the street. The plane of the sidewalk was about four feet above that of the street. West from Lookout street to Swift avenue, Hammond street ran down a steep hill. The gully had extended under the stringers underneath the south side of the board walk, and the stringers had rotted. From these two causes, the south side of the walk had sagged down to an extent to cause the walk to slope sharply to the south. Plaintiff, who was 56 years old, lived on the north side of Hammond street, just west of Lookout street. She left her house to go to work, and started westward on the sidewalk described. It had rained during the night, and the walk was wet and slippery. She realized that the way was dangerous, owing to its slope in two directions and its slippery condition, and states that she walked along the edge of the property line with the greatest care. At a point between the middle of the block and Swift avenue, her feet slipped toward the south, and she fell heavily to the sidewalk, breaking her arm. It appears that the defect in the sidewalk of which plaintiff complains had existed long enough for the city to have known of it, and to have repaired it had reasonable care been observed.

The negligence alleged in the petition is as follows: "That on the 28th day of August, 1907, and for a long time prior thereto, Hammond street, between Lookout streets on the

and that on said date there was a wooden sidewalk constructed upon and along the north side of Hammond street between the points named, consisting of two stringers running lengthwise, and having cross-planks nailed thereto which were about four feet long, that at a point on said sidewalk about 110 feet east of Swift avenue said walk had become old and crooked, and uneven and out of repair, and the cross-boards had become partly rotten, and the stringers underneath said walk had become weak and bent, rotten and decayed, and the braces underneath said stringers had become removed, and the dirt underneath (of) said stringers and braces had been permitted to wash away, causing the south side of said walk to drop and tilt from a horizontal, and to be sunken, and uneven and rough, and that, on account of such defects, said walk was caused to slope toward the south, leaving the south line of said walk about six inches below the line of its original plane of construction, making it dangerous for persons to walk thereon, and especially so in inclement or wet weather. That the city of St. Joseph, at said date, and for a long time prior thereto, carelessly and negligently maintained said walk in the condition aforesaid, and carelessly and negligently permitted the same to be and remain in the aforesaid defective condition upon said street as a public sidewalk and thoroughfare; that the dangers aforesaid were greatly increased whenever rains would fall upon said walk, making it slippery and difficult to stand on, or walk upon, and that all of the foregoing facts were well known to the defendant, or could have been so known to it by the exercise of ordinary care."

The notice given the city by plaintiff states with reference to the place: That the injury occurred while plaintiff was "walking along and upon the board and wooden sidewalk on the north side of Hammond street, and between Lookout street on the east and Swift avenue on the west and being in the west half of said block. That said sidewalk was carelessly and negligently constructed upon a steep incline or hillside sloping toward the west, and was so sloping and slanting that it was dangerous for persons to walk thereon, and especially so when the same became wet or damp from dew or rain. That on said day said walk was wet or damp from dew or rain, and had become old and curved, uneven, and out of repair, and the stringers underneath said walk had become rotten, decayed, or broken, and the dirt underneath said stringers and walk had been permitted to wash away and become removed by rains, and by the natural elements, causing said walk to be sunken, uneven, and rough, and causing the same to slope from the north to the south, as well as from the east to the west, and the surface of said walk was materially changed by reason of all of which it was unsafe and of August, 1907. I was by and on account of sloping, slanting, and defective condition aforesaid of said walk caused to slip, to fall." We think the description of the place of the injury sufficient. The prime object of the statute (section 5724, Rev. St. 1899 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 2906]), requiring the giving of notice in cases of this character, is to protect the city against fraudulent or stale demands. The city must be informed of the time, place, and circumstances of the injury in order that from the facts stated in the notice its officers may accurately investigate the merits of the claim. If the notice were so vague and indefinite in any of the particulars made essential by the statute as to be misleading, we would not hesitate in declaring it bad. A claimant will not be permitted to thwart the intent of the statute by untruthfulness or indefiniteness when the true facts may be clearly stated. But the statute should be construed reasonably. Its design is to defeat unjust demands, not to lay pitfalls in the way of honest claimants. The city may use it as a shield, not as a sword; and, where it appears, as it does here, that the officers of the city with the information given in the notice could not be misled, but might go to the place and put a finger on the negligent defect that plaintiff declared caused her injury, it would be a harsh and unjust rule that would deprive plaintiff of her cause of action because she failed to state the exact spot on which her injury was received. The evidence shows that in the west half of the block (a distance of perhaps 150 feet) the sidewalk sagged to the south because of the gully underneath and the decayed condition of the stringers. The notice informed the city that plaintiff's fall was caused by that defective condition. How could the city be misled or hampered in the investigation into the merits of the case by not being informed of the spot where plaintiff fell? Its officers could see the defective state of the sidewalk as stated in the notice. They would know that the cause of action would be bottomed on the negligence of maintaining the walk in such condition, and they would be in no possible danger of preparing a defense to one state of facts, and of being confronted at the trial with another.

We have examined the cases cited by defendant (Butts v. Town of Stowe, 53 Vt. 600; Dalton v. City of Salem, 139 Mass. 91, 28 N. E. 576; Cronin v. City of Boston, 135 Mass. 110), and find them to differ in essential facts from the case in hand, but, if they did not, we would not permit them to control our decision, since a rule more harsh on the claimant than that we have declared would impress us as being too unjust for adoption in-court. Reno v. City, 169 Mo. 642, 80 S. W. 123; Lyons v. City, 112 Mo. App. 681, 87 S. W. 588; Canter v. City, 126 Mo. App. 629, 105 S. W. 1.

We do not agree with defendant in its contention that the evidence does not show that the injury was the direct result of defendant's negligence. Certainly it was negligence for the city to suffer the sidewalk to remain for so long a time in the condition described. It may be true that plaintiff would not have fallen but for the wet condition of the walk which rendered it slippery, and that she would not have fallen had the walk been laid on a grade less steep, but it is a reasonable inference that she would have passed over the way in safety but for the pronounced slope to the south caused by the defective condition of the walk. The negligence of defendant, therefore, is presented by plaintiff's evidence as the direct and proximate cause of the injury, and it was an issue of fact to be sent to the jury.

Nor do we sanction the argument that we should declare as a matter of law that negligence of the plaintiff contributed to the production of the injury. The issue of contributory negligence was one of fact for the jury to solve. This is not a case like that considered by the Supreme Court in Cohn v. City, 108 Mo. 387, 18 S. W. 973, where the plaintiff deliberately or negligently chose the most dangerous of two or more convenient ways. By implication, defendant invited plaintiff to use the sidewalk in front of her home, and, under the circumstances before us, we think it is for the jury to say whether or not she was justified in using it. She knew the way was more dangerous than it would have been had it been kept in reasonable repair, but we cannot declare in law that it was so glaringly and imminently dangerous that a reasonably prudent person in the situation of plaintiff would have refused to encounter the danger. There was no other convenient way for her to take. To go into the street, she would have had to cross a deep gully, and in so doing would have encountered a risk perhaps as great as that she faced, and, because of the rain of the preceding night, it is fair to believe that the unpaved street was muddy and slippery, and consequently neither a desirable nor an entirely safe way for a woman to travel. Clearly the case should go to the jury on the issues of defendant's negligence and plaintiff's contributory negligence, and no occasion is presented for interference with the discretion exercised by the trial court in granting a new trial.

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

1. NEGLIGENCE (§ 121*)—EVIDENCE—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where an accident proceeds from an act of such a character that when due care is taken in its performance no injury ordinarily ensues from it in similar cases, it will be presumed to be "negligent."

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 139*)—DEATH OF SERVANT—PROXIMATE CAUSE.

A switchman, engaged as a brakeman on a loaded coal car that was being switched to a side track, was killed by the car colliding with a car on the main track. The accident occurred on a stormy night. The brakeman in charge of the other car left it on the track without a light and without notifying a fellow workman charged with the duty of signaling the engineer. The fellow workman could have prevented by proper care the coal car from being sent forward, or could have given decedent a lantern signal to stop the car before the accident. Held, that the proximate cause of the accident was the negligence of the brakeman in leaving his car without light and without notifying the fellow workman thereof, and the negligence of the fellow workman failing to take steps to prevent the accident.

5. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 180*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—FELLOW SERVANTS—LIABILITY—"RUNNING, CONDUCTING, OR MANAGING ANY LOCOMOTIVE, CAR, OR TRAIN OF CARS."

Rev. St. 1890, § 2864, as amended by Laws 1905, p. 135 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1637), making a railroad liable for the death of an employé occasioned by the negligence of another employé, while "running, conducting, or managing any locomotive, car, or train of cars," etc., covers the operation of cars at terminal yards, and the death of an employé of a railroad engaged as a brakeman on a loaded coal car while being shunted from a main switch track in a terminal yard to a side track, caused by the negligence of fellow servants in the moving of cars and the giving of signals, resulted from the negligence of an employé within the statute.

6. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 179*)—FELLOW-SERVANT STATUTE—CONSTRUCTION.

The fellow-servant statute is remedial in its nature, and the court must give to it such an interpretation as will best realize the purposes of the Legislature to afford employes, working in dangerous positions and exposed to unusual hazards, protection.

7. DEATH (§ 31*)—ACTION FOR DEATH—PARTY ENTITLED TO SUE.

Under Rev. St. 1890, § 2864, as amended by Laws 1905, p. 135 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1637), authorizing a recovery by the administrator of decedent leaving no husband, wife, or minor child, the administrator may sue for the negligent death of one of mature age, unmarried, and childless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. §§ 35-46; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

8. EVIDENCE (§ 174*)—MEMORANDA—ADMISSIBILITY.

A record book kept by a railroad, showing the names of employes in a railroad yard, compiled from time slips made in the yard by an employé required to keep the time of the employes in the yard, is inadmissible, where the time slips were admitted in evidence.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 882*)—INVITED ERROR—RIGHT TO COMPLAIN.

While a defendant, who is driven by adverse rulings of the court to contest a false issue, is not precluded, on preserving his exceptions, from availing himself in the appellate court of the error, yet a defendant who voluntarily accepts a false issue tendered by his adversary may not complain after he is defeated on such issue.

10. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 882*)—INVITED ERROR—RIGHT TO COMPLAIN.

Where, in an action for negligent death, brought under Rev. St. 1890, § 2864, as amended by Laws 1905, p. 135 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1637), plaintiff without objection proved the earning capacity of decedent and the dependency of his mother on him for support, and defendant on cross-examination attempted to show that decedent was not industrious, but idled away much of his time, defendant could not complain that plaintiff was permitted to show the pecuniary value of the life of decedent to those dependent on him.

Under Rev. St. 1890, § 2864, as amended by Laws 1905, c. 135 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1637), making a railroad liable for the death of an employé by the negligence of a co-employé, and declaring that the railroad shall pay as a penalty a sum not less than $2,000, nor more than $10,000, the remedy must be imposed by the Appeal from Circuit Court, Jackson County.

Action by Elizabeth Pratt, administratrix of Albert H. Pratt, deceased, against the Missouri Pacific Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Elijah Robinson and Harris Robinson, for appellant. Noyes & Heath and G. L. Walls, for respondent.

JOHNSON, J. This suit is prosecuted by the administratrix of the estate of Albert H. Pratt, deceased, to recover damages for the death of the decedent, which the petition alleges was caused by the negligence of defendant. The answer admits that Pratt was killed at the time and place alleged, but denies the other allegations of the petition, and contains pleas of assumed risk and contributory negligence. Verdict and judgment were for plaintiff in the sum of $4,500. Defendant appealed.

The injuries from which the unfortunate man died, in a few hours, were received about 8:30 o'clock p. m. March 5, 1906, in the terminal yards of defendant at Kansas City. Pratt was a switchman in the service of defendant, and was engaged at the time as brakeman on a loaded coal car that was being shunted from a main switch track to a side track. The yard where the switching was being done was what is called a gravity or "hump" yard. The tracks consisted of a main lead running east and west and 25 or more switch tracks diverging at intervals therefrom. Some of these switch tracks ran in a southwesterly, and others in a northwesterly, direction from the lead track. In approaching this yard from the east, as it was necessary to do in distributing a string of cars, the ground had been elevated in order that the end car, when detached from the train, would run by gravity to the place where it was to stop on a switch track. Switchmen were stationed in the yard to throw the necessary switches, and there is evidence to the effect that it was the duty of the engineer not to detach and send a car forward except on signal from the switchman, and that the signal should not be given except when the car had a clear track ahead. A brakeman was stationed on each car sent forward for the purpose of controlling the progress of the car to the place where it should stop. It was sleeting at the time of the injury, the night was very dark, and the rails were slippery. Some cars had been "kicked" forward, and the last one, an empty furniture car, for some reason, had fire in the yard, probably to warm himself. At any rate, the car was standing without any light on it when the next car was sent forward some five or ten minutes later. We are dealing now with controverted facts, and are stating the evidence most favorable to the cause of action. Pratt was the brakeman on the car last mentioned, which, as we have said, was a loaded coal car. He was at the brake, and, with the aid of a brake stick, was attending to his duty of controlling the progress of the car, which was running from four to five miles per hour. On account of the darkness and the sleet striking his face, he could see but a short distance. Evidently he did not see the furniture car, or know of its presence on the lead track, until it was too late to avoid a collision. It was the purpose to run his car on the lead track to a switch beyond the place where the furniture car was stalled. As the car ran along, a switchman uttered a warning cry, and Pratt was observed to be setting the brake. The coal car crashed into the furniture car with much violence, Pratt was thrown to the track, and the wheels of the coal car ran over him. There is evidence that the engineer, before shunting the coal car, received a go ahead signal from a switchman in the yard, and that Pratt tested his brake before the car was started and found it in good working order, and, further, it appears that neither the engineer nor Pratt received any signal to the effect that the main lead was fouled.

Acts of defendant alleged to be negligent, and of the commission of which we find substantial evidence, thus may be summarized: First. The furniture car was stopped on the main lead in a position to endanger the safety of the brakeman on the following car by the negligent manner in which the brakeman set the brakes. (There is evidence that the brakes of the furniture car were set very hard.) Second. Whether or not the fouling of the main lead was attributable to negligence, the car was negligently left standing without a light on it to give warning of the obstruction. Third. The switchman whose duty it was to signal the engineer knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care should have known, that the lead was fouled in time to have prevented the coal car from being "kicked" down the incline, but negligently failed to warn the engineer not to send the car forward.

In the argument of defendant on the proposition that the demurrer to the evidence should have been sustained, the point is urged that the evidence does not accuse defendant of any negligence that was the proximate cause of the injury, and that the injury should be considered as an unfortunate result of a mere accident. We regard this position as untenable. "The rule is that, when an accident proceeds from an act of such a character that, when due care is taken in its performance, no injury ordinarily ensues from it in similar cases, it will be presumed to be negligent." Shuler v. Railway, 87 Mo. App. 618. It is a fair inference, from all the facts and circumstances in evidence, that the furniture car did not stop on the main lead on account of insufficient impetus to carry it to its proper destination, but because of the act of the brakeman in setting the brake too hard; and though it may be said with reason that his act could have been the result of a mere mistake in judgment induced mainly by unfavorable weather conditions, and not of negligence, we think it would be difficult to exculpate him from the charge of negligence, in deserting the car without leaving a light on it and without calling the attention of the switchman, whose duty it was to signal the engineer, to the fact that he had left an obstruction on the track. That negligence should be considered as a proximate cause of the injury, regardless of whether or not the switchman had actual notice of the obstruction in time to give a saving warning, for if the brakeman had remained on his car, or at least had left his lantern there, he might, and doubtless would, have saved the life of his fellow workman. Because of the darkness and storm, he left a concealed pitfall. He could not do this and act with the degree of care and humanity to be expected of the ordinarily careful and humane person in his situation; and, further, if the switchman knew of the obstruction in time, by the exercise of reasonable care, to prevent the coal car from being sent forward, or to give Pratt a lantern signal to stop when the car might have been stopped before it reached the obstruction (it is reasonable to infer from the evidence that both, or at least the last mentioned, of these signals, could have been given), his failure thus to signal was negligence directly productive of the injury. We think it is clear that the evidence tends to inculcate both the furniture car brakeman and the signaling switchman, and to point to their negligence as proximate causes.

There is no room in this case for the application of the doctrine of assumed risk. The natural and inherent dangers of Pratt's calling were very great, and he assumed risk of injury from them as a part of his contract of employment; but he did not assume risks created by the negligence of his master, nor, as we shall show, did he assume risks created by the negligence of his fellow servants.

Nor can we agree with defendant that Pratt was guilty in law of contributory negligence. The signal given the engineer, and the fact that the engineer "kicked" his car forward, assured him that the way was clear. It was his duty not to rely blindly on such assurance, but to make reasonable use of his senses to protect his safety; but, considering all the facts of his situation—the deep darkness, the blinding storm, and the attention he naturally would give to regulating the speed of the car—we say it was for the jury to pass on the issue of whether or not he could or should have seen the car in time to avoid the collision. In answer to the argument that he might have dropped off the car or climbed back on it for safety, we say it would be a harsh and unjust rule that would accuse a man of negligence in law on account of his actions under stress of a sudden, imminent, and fearsome danger. The man stood at his post, and we shall not say he failed in the performance of his highest duty. That was a question for the jury.

Since the injury, according to the evidence of plaintiff, was caused by the negligence of fellow servants of Pratt, it goes without saying that such negligence would afford no cause of action against the defendant at common law, and we must turn to the statute to ascertain whether the Legislature has provided a remedy in cases of this character. The action is based on section 2864, Rev. St. 1899, as amended in 1905 (Laws 1905, p. 136). That section provides that: "Whenever any person including an employé * * * shall die from any injury resulting or occasioned by the negligence, unskillfulness, or criminal intent of any officer, agent, servant, or employé, whilst running, conducting or managing any locomotive, car or train of cars, or any street, electric or terminal or train of cars * * * the corporation * * * shall forfeit and pay as a penalty," etc. Defendant makes the point that the death of Pratt "was not caused by any negligence, unskillfulness, or criminal intent of any officer, agent, servant or employé, whilst running or conducting any locomotive, car or train of cars." We think the cause of action asserted falls squarely within the purview of the statute. It is conceded Pratt was an employé of defendant engaged in its service at the time of the injury, and we have shown that his death was caused by the negligence of co-employés. That this negligence was in the performance of the duty of moving a car and a train of cars is a proposition about which there can be no reasonable difference of opinion. It is immaterial that the train was being operated in a terminal yard, instead of on the highway. It was a train of cars in operation, nevertheless. The language of the statute expressed a clear legislative intent to cover the operation of cars and trains at terminals, as well as of trains on the road. The principal rule of construction to be applied to this statute is the same that governs the construction of the section commonly called the "fellow-servant statute" (section 2873, Rev. St. 1899 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 1655]). "Laws of this kind are of a remedial nature, and such an interpretation is and ought to be given to them as will best realize the purpose of the Legislature to afford employes of railroad companies, who work in dangerous positions and are exposed to the unusual hazards incident to a service in which their personal safety is jeopardized by the carelessness of numerous other employes over whom they have no control, and whose habits of work, in respect to being careful or careless, they have but slight chance to observe, redress for injuries sustained by the default of such other employes, unrestricted by the common-law doctrine in regard to injuries caused by the acts of fellow servants. Hence attention is paid rather to the humane spirit of the law than to its exact words." Rice v. Railway, 92 Mo. App., loc. cit. 38; Stubbs v. Railway, 85 Mo. App. 192; Shuler v. Railway, supra; Huston v. Railroad, 129 Mo. App. 576, 107 S. W. 1045; Briscoe v. Railroad, 130 Mo. App. 513, 109 S. W. 93; Callahan v. Railway, 170 Mo., loc. cit. 495, 71 S. W. 208, 60 L. R. A. 249, 94 Am. St. Rep. 746. We approve what was said in the foregoing quotation, and, though we find the action before us is within the strict letter of the statute, we take this occasion to declare that full efficacy must be given to the humane spirit and intent of the law.

Of the legal capacity of the administratrix to sue there can be no question. Pratt was a man of mature age, unmarried, and childless. The administratrix was his mother and dependent on him for support. The statute (section 2864), as amended in 1905 (Laws 1905, p. 135 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 1637]), provides: "If there be no husband, wife, minor child or minor children, natural born or adopted, * * * then in such case suit may be instituted and recovery had by the administrator or executor of the deceased," etc. The demurrer to the evidence was properly overruled.

Point is made that the court erred in excluding from the evidence a book kept by defendant which showed the names of the employes who were working at the scene of the accident. The purpose of the offer was to prove that one of plaintiff's important witnesses, who testified that he was at work in yard at the time of the injury, had given false testimony. The time slips or tickets made in the yard by the employe whose duty it was to keep the time of the employes were offered by defendant and admitted in evidence. The record book was a mere compilation of these slips. The following excerpt from the opinion of Judge Lamm, in Sharp v. Railway, 213 Mo. 517, 111 S. W. 1154, disposes of this point adversely to the contention of defendant: "The primary evidence obviously was the testimony of the inspector himself and his tally book made contemporaneously with his inspection. The record offered was a mere after-compilation of these tally books, in the nature of a ledger kept for the convenience of defendant. Note the following: There is even no testimony that the copying was correctly done. There is no excuse offered for the absence of the original memoranda, viz., the tally book and its contents, or for the absence of the evidence of the inspector who made both the inspection and the tally book. In this condition of things, it would be dangerously loose practice to permit the introduction of such secondary evidence. We are cited to no well-considered case holding such book admissible, on such proof. We take it, its admission would be a novelty in the law, and, if we were to allow its exclusion as error, we would open the door to grave abuses by such a precedent."

But one of the objections of the defendant to the instructions given at the request of plaintiff is of sufficient merit to call for special notice. That is addressed to the following instruction: "The court instructs the jury that, if you find for plaintiff, you will assess her damages at a sum not less than $2,000 and not exceeding $10,000, all in the discretion of the jury, and in arriving at the amount the jury may take into consideration the age, physical condition, and earning capacity of deceased at the time of his death." The statute provides that the offending corporation "shall forfeit and pay as a penalty * * * the sum of not less than two thousand dollars and not exceeding ten thousand dollars, in the discretion of the jury." Defendant argues: "The language of this statute shows clearly and conclusively that it is a penal statute, and that the question of compensation does not enter into the amount of damages which the plaintiff is entitled to recover. That being true, the said instruction No. 12, telling the jury that they should take into consideration the age, earning capacity, etc., of the deceased, was clearly erroneous." Plaintiff, without objection from defendant, was permitted to examine a witness on matters relating to the earning capacity of the decedent and the dependency of his mother on him for support, and on cross-examination defendant went into this subject and endeavored to show that Pratt was not industrious, but idled away much of his time. A defendant who is driven by adverse rulings of the court to contest a false issue is not precluded, where he has duly preserved his exceptions, from availing himself, in the appellate courts, of the error forced upon him; but a defendant who voluntarily accepts a false issue tendered by his adversary has no right to complain after he is beaten on ground of his own choosing. Neither party will be suffered to try the case on one theory in the trial court and on another in the appellate court. Defendant therefore is in no position to complain that plaintiff was permitted to show the pecuniary value of the life of the decedent to those dependent upon him.

But defendant did object and except to the instruction under consideration, and we must assume that the point was made that the remedy was penal, and must be awarded as a penalty, and not as compensation for actual damages inflicted. Whether or not the evidence we have noted was improper and should have been excluded had defendant objected to its reception, it became the duty of the court to declare in the instruction the correct rule relating to the remedy, and, should we find that an incorrect rule was given, we would hold that prejudicial error had been committed against the defendant. The rule now prevailing in this state is that such portions of the statute "as confer a remedy are to be liberally construed in advancement of the remedy, and such portions of it as impose a penalty are to be strictly construed, in order that the penalty shall be sustained and the statute shall be operative and in full force, to the end that the mischief which it seeks to prevent and punish shall be abated or minimized." Casey v. Transit Co., 116 Mo. App., loc. cit. 249, 91 S. W. 424; s. c. 205 Mo. 721, 103 S. W. 1146. The remedy must be imposed by the jury as a penalty, not as compensatory damages; but the statute in its present form does not fix the exact amount of the penalty, but leaves a wide range for the jury to exercise discretion. Between the limits of $2,000 and $10,000 the jury is given room for the expression of its convictions concerning the amount of the penalty that should be imposed. The very fact that the Legislature invested the jury with the right of exercising a discretion makes pertinent all of the facts and circumstances of the case that are necessary to be known in order that the discretion may be wisely, and not foolishly or capriciously, exercised. Not only is it essential that the jury should know the nature of the culpable act which gave rise to the cause of action, but also should they know the kind of man who met his death by the negligence of the defendant. The age and earning capacity of the decedent were proper subjects of investigation, and it was not error to instruct the jury to take such facts into consideration. The instruction does not tell the jury to award plaintiff compensatory damages. It directs them to assess the damages at a sum not less than $2,000 and not exceeding $10,000, "all in the discretion of the jury." While it does not use the word "penalty," it does fix arbitrary bounds to the verdict without reference to the question of whether actual compensation for the damages incurred would lie within those bounds. In doing this, the instruction sufficiently expressed the idea that the assessment of damages was to be treated by the jury as the imposition of a penalty. If defendant desired a more specific instruction, it should have asked it.

We find no substantial error in the record, and, accordingly, the judgment is affirmed. All concur.

1. WORK AND LABOR (§ 7*)—COMPENSATION—RIGHT TO RECOVER.

A married daughter, living with her husband apart from her father was requested by the latter to come home and work. Appeal from Circuit Court, Andrew County; Alonzo D. Burns, Judge.

Action by Maggie J. Carrell against Michael J. McDonnell. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. C. Growney, for appellant. L. C. Cook, for respondent.

BROADBUSH, P. J. This is a suit to recover for the value of plaintiff's services rendered by plaintiff on an alleged contract had with defendant. The plaintiff is the daughter of defendant, and was married prior to the 1st day of March, 1899, and was living with her husband and child separate and apart from defendant. Plaintiff's evidence went to prove that she left her own home, and at the request of defendant and took up her abode with him. The request mentioned was in the form of a letter, the contents of which were to the effect that defendant would like for plaintiff to come home; that her sister was there, but she would not stay, and if plaintiff would come home, he would fix things up right for her, and to come home and stay; that her mother was not able to do anything. Plaintiff in a short time thereafter sold her household goods, broke up her home, and went to Maryville. The defendant met her at the depot, and took her to his farm. After she got to the farm, the parties talked the matter over, and defendant said to her: "If you will stay with us from now on, I will do right by you. I will give you plenty. If your will stay with us, I will do right by you. Help me with the chores, and help me with the work." She worked for defendant from that time, doing the household work and also that of a farm hand. She the quit for a time, on the ground that her health had broken down. She left defendant's farm, and with her husband and child established themselves in a home in Maryville. She there followed the business of a dressmaker, in which she earned from $1 to $1.50 a day. On October 1, 1903, defendant went to her home and solicited her to go back to the farm, and upon her hesitation to consent to do so, he said to her; "Well, you will get pay for everything you've done for me. They won't stay with me. Won't you come back for your mother's sake, for God's sake?" Plaintiff again broke up her home, and with her child went back to the farm and resumed her former labors. She remained, performing such services as has been described until February 1, 1906, a period of 4 years and 4 months, which with that she had formerly performed aggregated 92 months of service. Disagreements arose then between herself and sister, who had returned to the farm, and whose husband had died in the meantime, and she left the farm again. That plaintiff rendered important service is well attested by her neighbors, who were witnesses in her behalf, and there was evidence going to prove the value of her services. As the case was tried before a jury, we deem it unnecessary to set out defendant's testimony, as their verdict settled the questions of fact in issue. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $1,515, upon which judgment was rendered, and defendant appealed.

The court instructed the jury, in substance, that if plaintiff rendered services for defendant at his request, she was entitled to recover for the reasonable value of such services. It is contended that the instruction is radically wrong. The theory of appellant is that plaintiff was the daughter of defendant, and that the law presumes, in the absence of an understanding that defendant was to pay and the other was to receive pay for her services, that such were rendered gratuitously. Louder v. Hart, 52 Mo. App. 377; Finnell v. Gooch, 59 Mo. App. 209; Castle v. Edwards, 63 Mo. App. 564. There is no disputing the rule which defendant has invoked, but it does not govern under the facts in this case. There are authorities of the most direct bearing holding that plaintiff is entitled to recover under the facts. The plaintiff was not a member of defendant's family; and, as the services were rendered at defendant's request, there was an implied contract that she would receive compensation therefor. We have a case in this state much in point. It is there said: "Where in an action by decedent's daughter for services plaintiff's evidence showed that she came home at her father's request, and began work with the understanding that services from the fact that she began work up to the death of her father." Shannon v. Carter, 99 Mo. App. 134, 72 S. W. 495. "Where the evidence raises the presumption that the services were rendered and received with the expectation that the parent would compensate the child for the same, there is sufficient evidence to send the issue to the jury." Finnell v. Gooch, supra. It is held in cases like this "that the relation of the parties did not make them members of the same family, and therefore takes the case out of the rule that services rendered another by a child or a member of his family are presumed to be gratuitous." Lillard v. Wilson, 178 Mo. 145, 77 S. W. 74.

The defendant argues, however, that under the instruction the jury were authorized to find for respondent without first finding that the services were performed under and by virtue of a contract either expressed or implied. This is a misapprehension, because the instruction requires that there must have been a request to plaintiff to perform the services before she was entitled to recover; and, as such a request raises an implied contract to pay for them, the instruction is not subject to criticism. And this rule is particularly applicable to the facts of this case, as plaintiff was not a member of defendant's family, and there existed no presumption that such services were to be performed gratuitously.

We pass over the objection made to instruction numbered 2 given for plaintiff, as we do not think there is any kind of error contained therein.

Instructions numbered 3, 4, and 5 we are fully persuaded are properly worded, and contain correct directions to the jury in arriving at a verdict; and there was no error in telling the jury they might allow plaintiff compensation for her services from March 1, 1899; the petition alleging that such services began September 1, 1899, because it was a mere variance, and was not misleading and worked no surprise to defendant.

Finding no error, the cause is affirmed. All concur.

Action by Dora Wenninger against D. B. Mitchell and others. Case was referred to a referee, who made findings for plaintiff, but on exceptions to the report the court entered judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions to overrule objections to the referee's report, and enter judgment thereon for plaintiff.

Thos. L. Buford and Fogle & Fogle, for appellant. Wm. Saxbury and Higbee & Mills, for respondents.

ELLISON, J. Plaintiff instituted this action by filing a bill in equity praying for dissolution of a partnership with defendants, and for an accounting. The case was referred to a referee, who took the evidence brought forward by the parties and made his findings for the plaintiff. Exceptions were taken to his report, which the court sustained, and entered a judgment for the defendants.

It appears that plaintiff was a widow and that her name was Skinner; that her husband died in 1905, and that afterwards, in the latter part of the summer or early fall of 1906, she returned to Queen City, Schuyler county, Mo. (the seat of this controversy), where she had formerly lived, and went to board with defendants, who are husband and wife. Defendant D. B. Mitchell was engaged in the livery stable business in that town, and shortly after plaintiff came to his house he sold her a half interest in the business and livery stock for $500 in cash. It seems that plaintiff desired to get married again, and was so anxious in that regard that she advertised for a husband in the newspapers through a matrimonial agency. In this way one Wenninger, of Lincoln, Neb., learned of her, and he, too, wanting to get married, entered into a correspondence with plaintiff, which quickly resulted in an engagement and shortly thereafter their marriage. In thus getting a husband plaintiff wittingly or unwittingly laid the foundation for the defense to this action. Defendants admit that plaintiff purchased a one-half interest in the livery stable for $500 and became a partner in the business. But they claim that she said to Mrs. Mitchell, before she purchased the interest in the livery stable, that she would pay well if we "would assist her in getting a man"; that after she purchased of them the interest in the stable, "she said if we would help her get this man, she would give us her interest in the barn for our service." Defendants say they carried out their part of the agreement, and that plaintiff's interest in the barn became theirs. We will examine the record to see what substance of law or fact there may be in this claim.

In the first place we find the work claimed to have been performed by defendants for plaintiff to be of such trifling nature as not to deserve serious consideration. It consisted principally in writing two letters. The time covered by this "service" was between the middle of September and the 24th of October, for the first letter was written two or three weeks after plaintiff arrived at their house, which was the latter part of August, and the last one must have been prior to October 24th, as that was the day of the marriage. Thus some time within the space of four or five weeks, Mrs. Mitchell wrote two letters at plaintiff's dictation. The record does not disclose how long a time this took, but the simple matter of writing two letters could not have taken long. Suffice it to say we cannot bring ourselves to believe the task was worth one-half of a livery stable, for which plaintiff had just paid defendants $500.

But defendants will say that the foregoing was not all the service they performed "in getting a man" for plaintiff. Their further claim came about in this way: It seems that Wenninger, recognizing the custom in such affairs, endeavored to seek plaintiff by going to her and having the wedding at her home. But counsel say the "Fates" interfered, and as he was on his way to the train in Lincoln, he met with an accident on a street car, the nature of which is not disclosed. However, he immediately instituted an action for damages against the street railway, and wrote to plaintiff the reason for his failure to appear at her home. It was then arranged by plaintiff that she would go to Lincoln, and the ceremony could be performed notwithstanding the misfortune. Plaintiff invited defendants to the wedding, and Mrs. Mitchell straightway accepted, or at least immediately expressed a desire to go, but Mr. Mitchell gave evidence of some hesitation. He said he was "short of money." At any rate, when he was informed of a matter to be presently mentioned, he too accepted, and all three started for the wedding. It is for thus attending the wedding that the additional service is made up. It is so out of the ordinary for one to charge for an acceptance of an invitation to a wedding that we find dir-that Mrs. Mitchell had never traveled much, and when we reflect on the pleasure it ordinarily must be to be favored with an invitation to a trip from a country village to a distant city to attend a wedding, and, as they said, partake of a "wedding feast," we are again loath to allow any charge in a proceeding in equity. But this is not all to be said on this head, in plaintiff's behalf and defendants' condemnation. Plaintiff paid the expenses of Mrs. Mitchell, and gave Mr. Mitchell a new bedstead. When he learned that plaintiff was to pay his wife's expenses for the trip and to give him her new bedstead, his objection softened, and the hesitation noted above faded away. These considerations make it a matter of some wonder how this branch of the defense, so extraordinary in its nature, could have been set up. Yet, notwithstanding the foregoing considerations, it must be conceded that the record discloses some evidence of an agreement on plaintiff's part, though she testified that there was not. For the reasons following it will not be necessary for us to say whether she did, in fact, promise to pay for what was not much more than imaginary service.

The defense is based on an unconscionable claim. In Ball v. Reyburn, 136 Mo. App. 546, 118 S. W. 524, we approvingly cited this definition of an unconscionable contract from Chesterfield v. Jansen, 2 Ves. Sr. 155: It is a bargain "such as no man in his senses, and not under a delusion, would make on the one hand, and as no honest and fair man would accept on the other." In passing on the utter disproportion between the service said to have been rendered and the compensation claimed we will add to what we said at the outset that we must keep in mind the situation of the parties and the possibility, or perhaps the better word would be the impossibility, of defendants rendering any real service. The man they were to aid plaintiff in marrying was not an acquaintance of theirs over whom they had influence; he was a total stranger to them, whom they had never seen or heard of, and who had never seen or heard of them. There is no pretense of any service, nor was there opportunity for any, save the mere writing of two letters, a common civility rarely made a matter for compensation. If plaintiff could have called upon any one running a typewriter, the service could, and doubtless would, have been performed for not more than 10 cents each.

But if we should have concluded that the evidence favored the defendants, it would have been, for another reason, of no benefit to them. It would but show a contract which the law would not aid in enforcing. The contract would be nothing less than that known as "marriage brokerage," which is condemned where the English common law is enforced. The contract, according to the

They were to procure, or aid in procuring, a husband for the plaintiff. It was subject to all the vicious tendencies such contracts have been shown to possess, and is wholly void. 2 Parsons on Contracts, 73; Lawson on Contracts, § 321; 3 Addison on Contracts, § 1349; Jangraw v. Perkins, 76 Vt. 127, 56 Atl. 532, 104 Am. St. Rep. 917; Duval v. Wellman, 124 N. Y. 156, 26 N. E. 343. The fact that plaintiff was engaged in seeking to marry Wenninger when defendants were called in and employed to aid her in the already conceived purpose does not change the nature or character of the contract, nor relieve it of any of the obnoxious features of an ordinary marriage brokerage agreement. Thus in Jangraw v. Perkins, supra, the contract was to hasten an intended marriage. It read: "I owe you five hundred dollars and I deed you this land to secure the debt; but if Rivett shall marry your daughter at once and be for six years her faithful husband, the debt shall be satisfied; otherwise, I must pay you five hundred dollars to be held by you in trust for her." It was condemned as illegal. In Crawford v. Russell, 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 92, the contract was "that plaintiff should do all she could to aid a marriage between Jeremiah and Christina by her influence and services," for which service and influence Christina promised, if she became the wife of Jeremiah, she would pay plaintiff $2,000 in cash, and to purchase for her a piano, and also a gold watch for plaintiff's daughter, and pay the expense of the daughter's education. The contract was condemned as illegal. In that case it is shown that the civil law allowed and encouraged marriage brokers and matchmakers for the reason that it was thought to facilitate matrimony. But the common law looked more to bad tendency and the evil consequences flowing from marriages thus brought about. And Judge Story said: "The surprise is not that the doctrine should have been established in a refined, enlightened, and Christian country, but that its propriety should ever have been a matter of debate." In Boynton v. Hubbard, 7 Mass. 112, such contracts were pronounced void, "not because they are fraudulent upon either party, but because they are a fraud upon third persons, and because they are a public mischief, as they have a tendency to cause matrimony to be contracted on mistaken principles, * * * and they are relieved against for the sake of the public." The idea conveyed by these cases is that to uphold contracts of this nature would make marriage a matter of traffic, and would stimulate marriage procurement in such degree as to be demoralizing in its tendency and unhappy in its results. They are therefore condemned on the ground of public policy.

But it may be said that plaintiff is in part delicto and therefore cannot take advantage of the illegality, since the law will not aid one who has joined in acts which the law forbids. There are, however, cases where, notwithstanding the plaintiff may profit by the relief asked, the public good requires that it be granted; especially is that true when the party seeking relief is the lesser wrongdoer. The question was recently elaborately discussed by Judge Valliant in Hobbs v. Boatrigh't, 195 Mo. 693, 93 S. W. 934, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 906, 113 Am. St. Rep. 709. The judge said that: "The doctrine that courts will not aid a plaintiff who is in pari delicto with the defendant is not a rule of universal application. It is based on the principle that to give the plaintiff relief in such case would contravene public morals and impair the good of society. Therefore the rule should not be applied in a case in which to withhold the relief would, to a greater extent, offend public morals. To promote the good of the public is the highest aim of the courts in the application of this doctrine. Under the head of exceptions to the rule in 9 Cyc. p. 550, it is said: 'Although the parties are in pari delicto, yet the court may interfere and grant relief at the suit of one of them where public policy requires its intervention, even though the result may be that a benefit will be derived by a plaintiff, who is in equal guilt with the defendant. But here the guilt of the parties is not considered as equal to the higher right of the public, and the guilty party to whom the relief is granted is simply the instrument by which the public is served.' A question of what is public policy in a given case is as broad as a question of what is fraud in a given case, and is addressed to the good common sense of the court." To the same effect, see Funding Co. v. Haskett, 125 Mo. App. 516-539, 102 S. W. 1050. The question was presented to the Court of Appeals in New York in a case of the kind before us. Duval v. Wellman, 124 N. Y. 156.¹ The contract was between a woman seeking a husband and the proprietor of a matrimonial journal called the "New York Cupid," and it read as follows: "June 2, 1887. Due Mrs. Gulon, from Mr. Wellman, fifty dollars ($50.00) Aug. 15th, if at that time she is willing to give up all acquaintance with gentlemen who were introduced in any manner by H. B. Wellman. If Mrs. Gulon marry the gentleman whom we introduce her to, an additional fifty dollars ($50.00) is due Mr. Wellman from Mrs. Gulon. [Signed] H. B. Wellman. E. Gulon." The court ruled that the money paid on the contract could be recovered back, on the ground that the woman was not the equal in guilt with the marriage promoter. And that where the contract was not malum in se, the law would afford relief to the more innocent party, and that two parties might "concur" in an illegal act without being deemed in all respects in pari delicto.

We, therefore, feel not restrained by the rule in pari delicto and, in consequence, do not consider that it in any wise stands in the way of plaintiff's right to claim her partnership share of the livery stable property.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with direction to overrule objections to the referee's report and enter judgment thereon as therein indicated. All concur.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri.
Nov. 15, 1909.)

1. COVENANTS (§ 94*)—COVENANT OF SEISIN—BREACH—NECESSITY OF EVICTION.

The rule that a grantor is not liable upon a covenant of fee-simple title until eviction, or something equivalent thereto, under a paramount title, applies in case of a failure of title, where no adverse title has been asserted, and generally where it is sought to avoid the payment of purchase money or the payment back of purchase money already paid, but does not apply in case of a covenant of an indefeasible estate in fee simple, where in fact the covenantor has no legal title whatever; there being a breach of the covenant warranting nominal damages the instant it was made, in which case the covenantee may sue when he has suffered substantial damages, though there has been no eviction.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 129*)—PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT—SUFFICIENCY OF TITLE.

Under a contract calling for a general warranty deed, a purchaser could not be compelled to accept a conveyance, where the legal title is outstanding in a third person.

3. COVENANTS (§ 132*)—WARRANTY OF FEE-SIMPLE TITLE—BREACH—DAMAGES—EXPENSE OF PERFECTING TITLE.

Where a vendor covenanted to convey a fee-simple title, the legal title being in a third person, the purchaser could call upon the vendor to obtain a fee-simple title, and, upon its default, could institute proceedings to protect and perfect the title, and the necessary expense incurred therein would be substantial damage, for which recovery could be had of the vendor under its covenant.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jackson County; Jas. E. Goodrich, Judge.

Action by the Pineland Manufacturing Company against the Guardian Trust Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Haff & Michaels and Daniel C. Ketchum, for appellant. Geo. H. English, Jr., and Edward C. Wright, for respondent.

ELLISON, J. This action is based on a covenant of seisin contained in a general warranty deed for lands lying in the state of Louisiana. The judgment in the trial court was for the defendant. The defendant demurred to plaintiff's petition on the ground that it did not state a cause of action. The trial court sustained that view, and plaintiff thereupon appealed.

Stripped of detail, the petition states that plaintiff bought a large tract of land of defendant situated in the state of Louisiana, and received from defendant a general warranty deed containing covenants for an indefeasible estate in fee simple and for further assurance. It is then alleged that, at the time of defendant's deed to plaintiff, one Searing held the legal title to the land by regular conveyance from the state of Louisiana, the then owner. It is then alleged: That Searing laid claim to the land and demanded of plaintiff that he be paid $10 per acre therefor; that plaintiff did not know of Searing's title or claim until after it had made a contract of sale to third parties, when it was discovered that defendant did not have the title and had not conveyed any to plaintiff. It is further alleged: That upon discovering that nature of the title, and in order to put such title in condition that plaintiff could make sale of the land, plaintiff demanded of Searing that he make a deed thereof to plaintiff, which he declined to do unless it was bought of him as already stated, and that Searing threatened that unless it was bought of him he would sell to other parties. That, in order to prevent Searing conveying the land to innocent third parties, plaintiff, through its attorneys, began the preparation of an action for a decree and prosecute such suit, or otherwise obtain the title from Searing, and that, if defendant did not do so, plaintiff would prosecute the action and hold defendant for all costs, fees, and expenses connected therewith, and that defendant refused to do so. That thereafter plaintiff did file its action against Searing in a court of competent jurisdiction in Louisiana praying that its title be declared to be null and void, and that the legal title be vested in plaintiff. That it was set up in the petition in such action that Searing purchased the lands from the state of Louisiana for the defendant and acting as agent for defendant, though he took the title in his own name. That Searing, the next day after plaintiff instituted such action against him, carried out his threat, and actually conveyed the land to a third party, though, on account of the lis pendens, the sale was of no avail. It was then averred that afterwards Searing filed an answer to such action denying that he purchased the lands as agent for defendant, but that he held the title as of his own right. It was then averred that the court aforesaid heard the action in due course and entered a decree divesting Searing of his title and vesting it in plaintiff. The expense of the litigation, consisting of costs and attorney's fees, are then set up, and judgment asked for the aggregate amount.

The defendant supports its attack upon the sufficiency of the petition by the claim that it is not liable under its warranty deed until there has been an eviction, or something equivalent thereto, under a paramount title. This claim is the general law in this state. Collier v. Gamble, 10 Mo. 473; Cockrell v. Proctor, 65 Mo. 46; Pence v. Gabbert, 63 Mo. App. 302; Leet v. Gratz, 92 Mo. App. 422; Id., 124 Mo. App. 394, 101 S. W. 696. But that law is generally stated as to claims where a party seeks to recover damages arising from a failure of title when none adverse thereto looking to taking the land from him has been asserted; and the damages are generally, though not always, where it is sought to avoid, in whole or in part, the payment of purchase money, or the recovery back of purchase money already paid. But this is not a case of such character, nor does the reason applicable to that class of cases apply to this. Here defendant attempts to convey land to plaintiff by deed, in which it covenants that it is seised of an indefeasible estate in fee simple, when in fact it had no legal title whatever; the legal title was outstanding in Searing. There was therefore a breach of the covenant the instant it was made, and nominal damages could have been recovered, though substantial damages could not be had until such character of damage accrued. It is true substantial damage, as, for instance, for failure of title, would not accrue until an eviction or its equivalent; but that does not meet the question in this case, either in technical law or bare justice. Here the plaintiff demands and obtains a covenant for an indefeasible fee-simple legal title and does not get such title. Plaintiff does not get such a title as will permit it to sell. It gets a title which could be defeated in toto by Searing selling to a third party without notice. It does not get a marketable title. It does not get a title which it could have been compelled to accept under a contract of sale calling for a general warranty deed. Mitchner v. Holmes, 117 Mo. 185, 205, 22 S. W. 1070; Mastin v. Grimes, 88 Mo. 478; Green v. Ditsch, 143 Mo. 1, 12, 44 S. W. 799. In that condition of case, when the defect is covered by the covenant, we cannot see any good reason why the covenantee could not resort to an action on the covenant when he suffers damage.

Plaintiff has a right to the title which defendant covenanted it had conveyed to it, and, having that right, it was within its privilege to call upon defendant to obtain it, or, in default, to obtain it itself. It therefore did no more than assert its plain right when it began and carried through proceedings in the proper court in Louisiana to protect and perfect its title. By that proceeding it got what defendant covenanted it should have, and in prosecuting that proceeding it incurred necessary expense, which it paid, and thereby substantial damage accrued. Not the damage, it is true, which ordinarily accrues on breaches of covenants, but the oddity or rarity of the claim cannot affect its justice or alter the law supporting it. Where a grantee has not been evicted, and he gets the land in fact, he must pay for it; but here, as already intimated, by the covenant which plaintiff obtained from defendant, it was to receive more than the land; it was to have also a title to the land, and it did not get it, and when it was put to expense in curing defendant's obligation substantial damage accrued. In such character of case, eviction is not necessary to maintain the action. Dickson v. Desire, 23 Mo. 151, 167, 66 Am. Dec. 661. While that was said in that case in respect to the assertion of a paramount title, yet it is applicable to the facts here. An action for substantial damages may be maintained on such covenant when such damages occur.

It is a part of defendant's insistence that an invalid claim does not constitute an incumbrance within the meaning of the covenants in a deed, and that a covenantor is not bound to protect a grantee against unlawful claims, citing Luther v. Brown, 66 Mo. App. 227, Smith v. Parsons, 33 W. Va. 644, 11 S.

E. 68, and other authority. What we have written above applies to this phase of the defense. This was not an invalid or unlawful claim in the sense of that rule of law. It was a real claim of the legal title to the property. The legal title was not in this defendant when it covenanted that it was. As already stated, plaintiff had a right to demand the legal title, and, defendant refusing to procure such title, it was plaintiff's privilege to institute proceedings to acquire that title and to hold defendant, after notice, for the necessary expense.

Coming to the measure of damages claimed in the petition, it may be stated to be the rule in this state that attorney's fees and necessary reasonable expenses, as well as proper court costs, may be allowed. Hazlett v. Woodruff, 150 Mo. 534, 51 S. W. 1048. But, if attorney's fees are claimed, notice of the action must have been given. Long v. Wheeler, 84 Mo. App. 101; Quick v. Walker, 125 Mo. App. 257, 102 S. W. 33. For, as stated in Long v. Wheeler, supra, the covenant "is not, in terms, that the covenantor will pay all expenses of defense of a paramount title, but that he will himself defend against it. He should therefore be given an opportunity to defend by notice of the action. Furthermore, * * * it may be that the breach of covenant is of such nature that the covenantor would willingly adjust it without litigation."

Defendant claims that the face of the petition shows the action to be barred by the 10-year period of the statute of limitations. The claim is based on the idea that the covenant was broken as soon as made, and that, if there was no title, the substantial damage occurred at the date of the deed, and the right of action accrued then, which was more than 10 years prior to filing the petition. The defendant may properly take advantage of the statute of limitations by demurrer whenever the face of the petition shows the bar to be complete. Burrus v. Cook, 215 Mo. 496, 114 S. W. 1065. But we do not think the petition shows a bar. The date of the covenant alleged in the petition was more than 10 years prior to filing the petition; but the substantial damage which is alleged, and for which the action is brought, occurred long within the period. The statute of limitations only begins to run from the time substantial damage occurs. Chambers v. Smith, 23 Mo. 174. If defendant had been without right or title of any kind, the entire superior right being in another, and an eviction, or, something equivalent, had occurred, then the substantial injury would have occurred when the deed was made; but that was not this case.

The result of these views is to reverse the judgment and remand the cause. All concur.

1. DAMAGES (§ 109*)—MEASURE OF DAMAGES—TEMPORARY INJURY TO LAND.

Where the destruction of the thing includes but the temporary injury to the land, and the thing may be replaced in a comparatively brief period, the true measure of damages is the cost of replacing it and the rental value of the land until it is replaced.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 273-278; Dec. Dig. § 109.*]

2. DAMAGES (§ 110*)—MEASURE OF DAMAGES—PERMANENT INJURY TO LAND.

Where the destruction of the thing inflicts more than a temporary injury to the land, or the replacement would be impossible or tedious and uncertain both in cost and result, the measure of damages is the damage inflicted on the market value of the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 273-278; Dec. Dig. § 110.*]

3. DAMAGES (§ 112*)—MEASURE OF DAMAGES—MATURED CROPS—TREATED AS PERSONAL PROPERTY.

4. DAMAGES (§ 217*)—DESTRUCTION OF CROP—INSTRUCTION AS TO MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

In an action against a railroad company for the destruction of a crop of alfalfa from water being thrown back upon the land because of the insufficiency of a culvert put in by the company over a natural water course, where it was shown that three other crops could have been grown upon the land during the season, an instruction that the jury should assess plaintiffs' damages at the fair value of the alfalfa on the ground at the time of the loss was erroneous, as it permitted the jury to include in their assessment the value of three future crops, which was an element too contingent and speculative to afford a basis for the assessment of the damages sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 556-559; Dec. Dig. § 217.*]

5. DAMAGES (§ 112*)—GROWING CROPS—MEASURE.

Where water destroyed the first and matured crop of the season of alfalfa, root and branch, the measure of damages was the value of the crop, and the cost of reseeded, and the rental value of the land, and not the value of the crop destroyed, plus three other possible crops that might have been grown the same season.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Platte County; A. D. Burnes, Judge.

Action by John G. Adam and another against the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

O. M. Spencer, H. B. Pyle, and Guy B. Park, for appellant. John W. Coots, for respondents.

Plaintiffs allege the culvert was insufficient, and that in 1908 five acres of alfalfa planted by plaintiffs in the preceding year were totally destroyed by the waters thrown back on plaintiffs' land by the obstruction. Several defenses were interposed in the answer. A trial to a jury resulted in a verdict and judgment for plaintiffs in the sum of $200, and the cause is here on the appeal of defendant.

The errors assigned by defendant relate solely to the issue of the measure of damages. It appears that a matured crop was destroyed, and, further, that the deposits left on the land prevented any renewal of the crop. The evidence of plaintiffs is to the effect that the market value of the matured crop, which was the first of the season, was $10 per acre, and that three other crops would have been produced that season. A witness testified that a field of alfalfa was of the value of "$10 an acre for each cutting and $10 for the stubble." Evidently this estimate was adopted by the jury. In the instructions given at the request of plaintiffs, the jury were told that, if they found for plaintiffs, to assess the damage "at the fair value of said alfalfa on the ground at the time of such loss or damage." Defendant argues that since plaintiffs failed to prove either the cost of reseeded and the rental value of the land while a new crop of alfalfa was being grown, or the difference in the market value of the land caused by the destruction of the reproductive power of the roots, there was no evidence on which to base a verdict. It is the theory of defendant that the proper rule was the difference in the market value of the land before and after the injury. In this conclusion defendant finds support in the opinion of the Supreme Court of Nebraska in Thompson v. Railway, 121 N. W. 447, where it is said: "There is a difference in condition between an ordinary annual crop and a permanent crop, such as alfalfa, which justifies and requires a different rule in the measurement of damages, and we are of the opinion that a fair criterion of the damages suffered by the destruction of a good stand of alfalfa would be the difference between the value of the land with such crop standing and growing upon it and the same without such crop." This view of the law, doubtless, was induced by consideration of the facts that alfalfa is perennial and its roots grow very deep and become closely interwoven. We do not think the opinion of the Nebraska court is in harmony with the fundamental rules recognized in this state in such cases. These rules thus may be stated: Where the destruction of ure of damages is the cost of replacing it and the rental value of the land until it is replaced; but where the destruction of the thing inflicts more than a temporary injury to the land, or the replacement would be impossible or tedious and uncertain both in cost and result, the criterion is the damage inflicted on the market value of the land. And in cases where a matured crop is destroyed the crop is treated as personal property, and the measure of damages is its market value standing on the ground.

Illustrative of these rules are the following instances: The value of an annual crop, such as corn, wheat, or oats, destroyed before maturity, is measured by the cost of re-seeding and the rental value of the land. Standley v. Railway, 121 Mo. App. 537, 97 S. W. 244; Jones v. Cooley Lake Club, 122 Mo. App. 113, 98 S. W. 82. A hedge was treated as a part of the inheritance, and the rule applied was the difference in the market value of the land before and after its destruction. Gates v. Railway, 44 Mo. App. 488. Fruit trees were held to belong to the inheritance, but the matured fruit on them to be personalty. Doty v. Railroad, 136 Mo. App. 254, 116 S. W. 1126. A crop of timothy hay was treated as personalty, but damages for the grass roots, which also were destroyed, were held to be measured by the cost of reseeded and the rental value of the land. Mattis v. Railway, 119 S. W. 998. In this case it is said that a different rule would be applied where prairie grass roots were destroyed, because of the impossibility of replacing wild grass. In such case the injury to the inheritance would be the test. There has been a vast deal of law written in this state on the subjects we are discussing, and the decisions are not altogether harmonious. It is not necessary nor useful to refer to or even cite the numerous cases. We are satisfied with our opinions in the Mattis and Doty Cases, and think the rules applied in them control the determination of the question under consideration.

We perceive no essential difference between a timothy or clover field and one of alfalfa. All of these crops are perennial, and, if totally destroyed, may be replaced without permanent injury to the soil. Their replacement is a matter of a comparatively short period and may be accomplished with reasonable definiteness and certainty as to cost and result. We conclude that the proper rule, in the case at bar, for measuring the damage caused by the destruction of the roots, was the cost of reseeded and the rental value of the land, and that the rule applicable to the matured crop was its market value standing on the ground. The instruction to the jury was erroneous, because it did not refer to the crops grown in the future are an element too contingent and speculative to afford a basis for the assessment of damages in such cases. Standley v. Railroad, supra.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded. All concur.

1. NEW TRIAL (§ 117*)—PROCEEDINGS TO PROCURE—TIME FOR MOTION—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE.

While an amendment to a pleading or motion is an abandonment of the original, the statute requiring motions for a new trial to be filed within four days is mandatory, and an amended motion cannot be filed after that time.

2. NEGLIGENCE (§ 59*)—PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Where negligence is admitted or otherwise proved, and the injuries are immediate and flow directly from the negligent act, the guilty person will not be excused because the particular circumstances are unusual and could not ordinarily have been foreseen.

3. CARRIERS (§ 280*)—CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS—INJURIES TO STOCKMAN—NEGLIGENCE.

Plaintiff, a shipper of stock, was required by his contract to look after it, including the fastening of the car door, for which he was furnished with a key. While the car was on a side track en route, he went to look after his stock, but, instead of returning to the caboose, where he was supposed to stay, remained in the car all night. A collision occurred during the night which injured him. Held, that the carrier's employes had the right to assume that he would not quarter himself in the car, and the company owed him no duty except not to injure him purposely.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Adair County; Nat. M. Shelton, Judge.

Action by Henry Fusselman against the Wabash Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded, unless remittitur be made.

J. L. Minnis and Higbee & Mills, for appellant. Weatherby & Frank and Campbell & Ellison, for respondent.

BROADDUS, P. J. This is a suit for damages for injuries plaintiff claims he sustained to his person, and for injury to certain personal property by reason of the alleged negligence of defendant. In January, 1907, plaintiff shipped some household goods, farming utensils, baled hay, and two horses and one mule over defendant's railroad from Kansas City to Kirksville. The property was all shipped in one car; the horses and mule being separated from the other property by a temporary partition. The contract made it the duty of plaintiff to look after and care for the stock, and to look after the fastening of the door to the car, and for this purpose he was furnished with a key to the door. The plaintiff traveled in the caboose of the train, which when it reached Moberly en route, about 6 o'clock p. m., the car containing his property was switched onto a side track. Plaintiff testified: That after the car was switched he asked some one of defendant's employes when his car would leave, and was informed that it would soon leave; that afterwards he went into the car to see about his animals and gave them some feed; that he remained in the car all night, sitting upon some of his goods; that during the night, but at what time he could not state, the defendant's employes in switching caused some other car to strike his car with such force and violence that one of his horses was thrown through the partition and over a bedstead, demolishing the bedstead and injuring the horse, besides doing other damage; that he was also thrown down and rendered unconscious; that after he arrived at Kirksville he called the attention of the station agent to the injured condition of the horse; that afterwards he filed a claim against the company for damages to the horse, but at that time made no claim for injury to his own person; and that he was unable to ascertain the extent of the injury to his horse until several months thereafter, when it became certain that it was permanent. Plaintiff recovered damages for injury to his horse in the sum of $50, and $1,000 for injuries to his person. The defendant in due time filed a motion for a new trial and in arrest of judgment, but, after the expiration of four days, filed an amended motion, and later filed a second amended motion, neither of which amendments are set forth in the abstract; but the original motion is.

Respondent contends that the filing of the first amended motion was an abandonment of the original motion, and the filing of the second amended motion was an abandonment of the first amended motion. The rule in such instances is that the filing of an amendment to a pleading or motion amounts to an abandonment of the original. Kortzendorfer v. Kansas City, 52 Mo. 206; Roberts v. Company, 26 Mo. App., loc. cit. 98; Walker v. Railroad, 193 Mo., loc. cit. 472, 92 S. W. 83. In a recent decision of this court, however, it is held that the statute requiring motions for a new trial to be filed within four days is mandatory, and that no motion for a new trial nor an amendment thereto can be properly filed after the expiration of said time, and, where a motion is filed within the proper time, an amendment filed after that time is a nullity, and as such has no effect upon the original motion. Brinton v. Thomas, 119 S. W. 1016. Under the authority of this case, and others, it is plain that, as the original motion is contained in the abstract, the whole case is before this court as made by the bill of exceptions and record proper. Mirrieless v. Wabash Ry. Co., 163 Mo. 470, 63 S. W. 718; State v. Brooks, 92 Mo. 542, 5 S. W. 257, 330; Bank v. Bennett, 138 Mo. 494, 40 S. W. 97.

Appellant claims that there is no evidence, so far as the issue relates to the injuries respondent asserts that he received to his person, that defendant's employes had any knowledge that he was in the box car at the time, and that his injuries were the result of his own negligence. On the contrary, respondent insists that, as it was made his duty "to attend to and care for his stock, therefore he had the right to go into the car at any time, and that defendant had no right to assume that he would not be there at any particular time. The fact that plaintiff had horses * * * in the car made it the defendant's duty to exercise reasonable care to avoid injury. The defendant therefore owed to plaintiff a duty, regardless of whether plaintiff was in or out of the car, and that duty was to handle the particular car with care so as to avoid unnecessary injury, and whenever defendant breached that duty, and injury resulted from such breach, plaintiff was entitled to recover therefor." It is said: "The negligence being established, defendant is liable for all the consequences directly resulting therefrom, though the particular injury might not have been anticipated. In case the negligence is admitted or otherwise proved, and the injurious consequences are immediate and flow directly from the negligent act, the person guilty of the act will not be excused for the reason that the particular consequences are unusual and could not ordinarily have been foreseen." Graney v. Ry. Co., 140 Mo., loc. cit. 98, 41 S. W. 246, 38 L. R. A. 633. And a similar enunciation of the principle is found in Lawrence v. Company, 119 Mo. App., loc. cit. 327, 93 S. W. 897. The case of Bolton v. Mo. Pac. Ry. Co., 172 Mo. 92, 72 S. W. 530, relied on by respondent, has no application.

There can be no question but what defendant's act in producing the collision was the immediate cause of respondent's injuries, and that it should answer in damages, unless, under the circumstances, the appellant owed respondent no duty to look after his safety while in the car, or that he was guilty as a matter of law of contributory negligence. After respondent went into the car and looked after his stock and fed them, which only occupied a few moments of time, he had no further duty to perform, and his remaining therein afterwards until next morning was purely voluntary. The appellant's agents did not, and were not required to, know that he would remain there during the entire night. No reasonable person would have anticipated that he would have done so. His place was in the caboose, not in the car. Under the circumstances, the company owed no duty whatever to plaintiff, except not to injure him purposely. Furthermore, we are of the opinion that appellant's employes had the right to assume that he would not quarter himself in the car for the night. It is held, in Barker v. Railroad Co., 98 Mo., loc. cit. 54, 11 S. W. 254, that "the general duty of a railroad to run its train with care becomes a particular duty to no one until he is in a position to have the right to complain." This rule was quoted and approved in Frye v. Railway Co., 200 Mo., loc. cit. 407, 98 S. W. 566, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1069. Numerous cases might be marshaled to sustain this proposition; but we conclude that it is too well settled to be seriously denied. The plaintiff, furthermore, was guilty of such contributory negligence as precludes his right to recover. Voluntarily placing himself in the car, and there remaining until the collision occurred, was a voluntary, unusual, and unnecessary act, which he was not required to do under his contract. He thus voluntarily placed himself in a place of danger, as the result showed. It is true he may not have anticipated danger. In that respect he stands in no better position than appellant, who could not have reasonably anticipated that he would be in the car. Both stand in pari passu, without preference. It was a question of law under the evidence, and appellant's demurrer to the respondent's claim for his personal injuries should have been sustained.

The appellant contends that the court committed error in instruction numbered 2, given for plaintiff, wherein it was assumed that plaintiff's horse was injured by defendant carelessly and negligently running a car against the car containing said horse. Taken in connection with instruction numbered 1, which properly directed the jury on the question of negligence, the jury could not be misled. Besides, the purpose of the instruction was only to direct the attention of the jury as to the question of damages, and not to that of its liability.

That appellant was liable for the injury to the horse there can be no question.

The cause is reversed and remanded, unless respondent will within 10 days enter a remittitur for $1,000, in which case the judgment will stand affirmed. All concur.

SHARTLE v. MODERN BROTHERHOOD OF AMERICA.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 15, 1909. Rehearing Denied Dec. 6, 1909.)

1. INSURANCE (§ 694*)—MUTUAL BENEFIT INSURANCE—BENEFITS—NECESSITY OF INITIATION—FRATERNAL INSURANCE COMPANIES.

The by-laws of a fraternal benefit society provided that, upon receipt of the benefit certificate, the applicant should be initiated by the subordinate lodge, unless initiation was refused, when the certificate should be returned to the supreme lodge, and that no liability for benefits upon death should attach until all the acts, laws, and rituals prescribed had been complied with, and that no officer could waive any provision of the by-laws. Rev. St. 1899, § 1408 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1111), requires such associations to have a lodge system and a ritual. Held, that initiation of the certificate holder was essential to recovery upon the certificate, and no recovery could be had where the applicant died after issue and delivery of the certificate to him and payment of the first assessment, but before initiation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1834; Dec. Dig. § 694.*]

2. INSURANCE (§ 724*)—MUTUAL BENEFIT INSURANCE—ESTOPPEL TO DENY LIABILITY.

A fraternal benefit association may be estopped to deny liability, notwithstanding non-compliance by a member with the by-laws as to the requisites of liability, if its supreme officers led deceased to believe that it had assumed liability without such compliance, or by such conduct of its subordinate officials continued so long that it must have necessarily become known to the supreme officials.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1866; Dec. Dig. § 724.*]

3. INSURANCE (§ 817*)—MUTUAL BENEFIT INSURANCE—EFFECT OF BY-LAWS—KNOWLEDGE OF CERTIFICATE HOLDER.

It must be assumed, in an action on a fraternal benefit association certificate, that the certificate holder knew the provisions of the by-laws of the association.

subordinate lodge of defendant fraternal benefit association for membership, and the application was approved on the 23d and sent by the supreme lodge to the subordinate lodge and delivered to decedent on December 5th, when the benefit assessment for December was collected, which payment the by-laws provided should be returned if he was refused initiation. Decedent died on December 13th without having been initiated. Held, that defendant was not estopped to deny liability on the certificate by reason of any conduct leading decedent to believe that he need not comply with the by-laws, which required an initiation before becoming a member and entitled to benefits; there having been no time before his death for such a course of conduct.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1866; Dec. Dig. § 724.*]

5. INSURANCE (§ 724*)—MUTUAL BENEFIT INSURANCE—ESTOPPEL—ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

A member of a fraternal benefit society could not be misled by the nonenforcement of the by-laws as to matters essential to constitute membership so as to estop the society from denying liability on the certificate for noncompliance with such by-laws, where he did not know of their nonenforcement.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jackson County; Walter A. Powell, Judge.

Action by Ella M. Shartle against the Modern Brotherhood of America. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Conkling, Rea & Sparrow, for appellant. Metcalf, Brady & Sherman, for respondent.

ELLISON, J. Plaintiff is the beneficiary in a benefit certificate for $1,000 issued by defendant to her husband in his lifetime. He died, and defendant refused to pay, and plaintiff thereupon instituted this action. The defendant is a fraternal benefit society organized under the statutes of Iowa, and is also doing business in this state under authority of our laws. On the 20th of November, 1906, the deceased, then being a resident of Independence, Mo., made application to the subordinate lodge of defendant for that city for membership and for the benefit certificate in controversy. The application was approved on the 23d of November, 1906, and on the next day the benefit certificate was issued and sent by defendant's "Supreme Secretary" from the home office in Iowa to the secretary of the subordinate lodge at Independence. A few days thereafter, on the 5th of December, 1906, that secretary delivered the certificate to the deceased, and collected from him the benefit assessment for the month of December. A few days after this, viz., on the 13th of December, 1906, deceased died without having been initiated or accepted as a member of the Independence lodge and without having taken any of the ritualistic work prescribed by the sions:

"Sec. A. * * * Upon receipt of the benefit certificate the president shall notify the candidate and he shall be initiated by the subordinate lodge at a regular or special meeting. At any time before the initiation of an applicant, the lodge may, by a majority vote, refuse to initiate, in which case, the benefit certificate with a certified statement of the action of the subordinate lodge, shall be immediately forwarded to the Supreme Secretary."

"Sec. D. The initiation fee shall be deposited by the secretary with the treasurer, and in case the applicant is rejected, said fee shall be returned to him by order of the lodge. But if the applicant fails to report for medical examination within thirty days after his election, or fails to report for initiation within sixty days after his benefit certificate is issued, he shall forfeit the membership fee, and if he desires to become a member, must again make application, when his fees shall be credited on second application. * * *"

"Sec. G. The liability of this fraternity for the payment of benefits upon the death or injury of a member shall not begin until all the acts, qualification and requirements prescribed in the above division, and in all the laws, rules, regulations and ritual of the fraternity shall have been fully complied with by him, and until all acts therein prescribed for the lodge shall have been fully complied with by it, and until his application shall have been approved by the lodge and head physician, and a benefit certificate issued as provided in section C of this division, and delivered to the applicant while in good health, and no officer of this fraternity is authorized or permitted to waive any of the provisions of this division, or these laws, or any other of the laws of this fraternity which shall relate to the contract of insurance between the members and the fraternity."

It thus appears that there was delivered to deceased, and he accepted, a benefit certificate before he became initiated as a member of the defendant's subordinate lodge for Independence, and before he took upon himself any ritualistic work. The by-laws above quoted provide that, when the benefit certificate is received, the applicant therefor shall be initiated by the subordinate lodge. If initiation is refused, the certificate is to be returned to the Supreme Secretary at the home office. It will be seen that the by-laws further provide that no liability shall attach "until all the acts, qualification and requirements prescribed, * * * and all the laws, rules, regulations and ritual shall have been complied with." Such laws also provide that no officer is authorized to waive any provisions thereof. The deceased died without having complied with any of these prerequisites entitling him to a benefit certificate. The terms of section 1408 of the Statutes of 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1111) require (as the by-laws of defendant required) that these associations have a lodge system and a ritualistic form of work. The St. Louis Court of Appeals has said that: "By requiring a lodge system, the statute evidently intended that no person could become a member of these orders until he was initiated as a member of one of its lodges." The by-laws of these associations expressly so provide. Hiatt v. Fraternal Home, 99 Mo. App. 105, 72 S. W. 463. And this is said to be, not an idle form, but is necessary under the charter of the society. Loyd v. Modern Woodmen, 113 Mo. App. 19, 87 S. W. 530.

The question now under consideration has been before the courts in other states, and it is held that initiation into the lodge and compliance with essential terms of the by-laws of the association are necessary prerequisites to a valid and binding beneficiary certificate. Matkin v. Supreme Lodge, 82 Tex. 301, 18 S. W. 306, 27 Am. St. Rep. 886; Driscoll v. Modern Brotherhood, 77 Neb. 282, 109 N. W. 158; Loudon v. Modern Brotherhood, 107 Minn. 12, 119 N. W. 425. See, also, Taylor v. Grand Lodge, 75 Hun, 612, 29 N. Y. Supp. 773. It cannot be denied, for the record conclusively shows, that deceased was never initiated into the society; nor were any of the essential matters done by him, required by the by-laws, which entitled him to a benefit certificate or obligated the society to pay the certificate after his death. But it is insisted that defendant is estopped to deny liability by having waived these provisions of its by-laws, and that the obligation arose from that fact. There is no doubt that an association of this character can become liable by waiver and estoppel, notwithstanding the prerequisites to liability, as required by the laws of the association, have not been complied with. McMahon v. Macabees, 151 Mo. 522, 52 S. W. 384; Supreme Fraternal Circle v. Crawford, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 603, 75 S. W. 844; Benefit Ass'n v. Blue, 120 Ill. 121, 11 N. E. 331, 60 Am. Rep. 558; McCorkle v. Texas Benevolent Ass'n, 71 Tex. 149, 8 S. W. 516. These authorities are taken from plaintiff's brief; but in each of them it appears to be necessary that the society has acted towards deceased in such way as to lead him to believe the laws would not be enforced, and that an obligation would attach notwithstanding there had not been any compliance with those laws. So it may be said that if the association, through its supreme officers, by a course of dealing with the deceased, leads him to believe that it has assumed an obligation to pay the certificate without compliance with its laws, then it will not be permitted to deny liability; and though this course of dealing has been had with inferior officers—officers of the subordinate lodge—without authority to bind the society, yet if it has been carried on in such way, or for such length of time, as necessarily to have been known to the supreme officers of the general society, it will become binding.

What are the facts in this case as applied to this rule of law? Assuming, as we must, that deceased was acquainted with defendant's by-laws, as we have quoted them, what evidence is there to show that he was lulled into security, or deceived by the defendant, or that he was led to believe the defendant would not require him to comply with the laws, even to becoming a member of the society? We are not cited to any testimony of that character in the record. The time between his first movement toward obtaining a benefit certificate and his death was quite short, 23 days. As already stated, he made application for membership on the 20th of November, which was sent to the home office and approved, and on the 24th of November the beneficiary certificate was issued and sent to the local secretary of the subordinate lodge and on the 5th of December deceased paid 90 cents as initiation fee, to be returned to him if he was rejected. In a week and a day thereafter he died, before any opportunity was presented for deception or course of conduct leading him, as a reasonable man, to believe that he need not comply with any of the requisites necessary to make him a member of the society. He paid the fee; but that he knew to be an advance payment, which was to be returned if he was rejected. So the most that can be said in behalf of plaintiff is that deceased had taken the first of many steps necessary to make a contract with defendant, and died before any was, in fact, made, and before many of the vital requisites to that contract had been performed.

Plaintiff introduced evidence in her behalf which tended to show that the by-laws as to initiation of members into the society, of ritualistic work, etc., were not observed by the Independence and other lodges. It may be (we have no means of knowing) that defendant, by its course of conduct with others, became estopped as to them; but that has no bearing on this case, governed, as it must be, by its own facts. If there had been time for a course of conduct with the deceased in the matters now relied upon, and defendant had denied that it had done anything to mislead deceased, it may be that proof of what it customarily did with others would have had some tendency to prove what it did with deceased; but no such situation is presented by the record. The upshot of plaintiff's position is, and must be, under the facts, that, since defendant in the past had allowed others a noncompliance with its laws, it would, in the future, allow plaintiff the same thing; but, aside from the foregoing considerations, it was not made to appear that the deceased knew of the course of carelessness and non-enforcement of by-laws as to the essential requisites to the contract. Unless he knew that was the customary practice, he was, of brief will disclose that they are all based on a course of conduct which misled the assured. That fact appears in all the cases, notably that from our Supreme Court. McMahon v. Maccabees, supra. We recently had a case in this court (Burke v. Grand Lodge, 136 Mo. App. 480, 118 S. W. 493), in which we held, in an opinion by Judge Johnson, that the society was estopped to deny liability for the certificate; but there the assured had been a member of the lodge for eight years, and the defense was suspension for being behind with dues at the time of his death; but facts are set out in the opinion showing that he had frequently been behind and no forfeiture taken. It was true that it appeared some member of the lodge "would get up and stand good" for delinquent members, and for the assured in the different instances when he was delinquent. The practice of granting these indulgences to the assured and other members, the opinion states, was very common and was known to all; and so, when it came to taking a forfeiture for nonpayment against the assured when he was dying, we refused to allow it. But this is no such case as that, and cannot in any way be likened to any of the authorities upon which plaintiff has placed reliance.

This is merely a case in which it is stated what might have occurred, if deceased had lived any considerable length of time, should be assumed by us as having actually occurred. The judgment is reversed. All concur.

2. RAILROADS (§ 484*)—FIRES—EVIDENCE.

Evidence, in an action to recover for the burning of plaintiff's mill by sparks from defendant's locomotive passing about 50 feet from the building, held sufficient to submit the case to the jury under the rule that, where the evidence shows no more than a probability that the source of a fire was a railroad engine, it is sufficient to submit to the jury, although the evidence as to the origin of the fire was entirely circumstantial.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Holt County; William C. Ellison, Judge.

Action by Arthur O. Markt against the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

BROADDUS, P. J. This is a suit to recover damages for loss sustained by plaintiff by the burning of his mill and electric plant, alleged to have been set on fire by sparks from one of defendant's locomotive engines. The plaintiff obtained judgment, from which defendant appealed.

As the appellant has taken his appeal upon the sole ground that the respondent was not entitled to recover under the proof, it is necessary to examine all the material evidence in the case for a proper determination of that question. There is no question that the fire occurred about 9 o'clock a. m. June 27, 1907, and that the property mentioned was entirely destroyed by fire. The building was located in the town of Maitland, Mo., 50 feet and 4 inches from the line of appellant's railroad track. The depot is situated on the west side of the track, which, after leaving the depot, curves to the southwest and is about 1,500 feet from where plaintiff's building was located, which was also situated on the west side of the track. The building was a two-story and basement structure covered with metal. In the basement were the engines, boilers and machinery. In the first story were the mill machinery, feedroom, and office, and in the second story was the machine for cleaning meal and grain and other material.

No one saw how the fire started, so it is a matter to be inferred from the evidence, if the appellant is to be held liable. As the respondent was the only person in and about the building just previous to its discovery, the case depends largely upon his evidence. He stated: That the line of the railroad extended in a semicircle from the depot, and then in a southwesterly direction past his building, which faced the railroad to the southwest; that there were four doors and three windows on the south side facing the track; that there was an opening in the window of the upper story on the south side about ten by eight inches, where a pane of glass had been broken a few weeks previously; that the weather was dry; that there was chaff scattered on the upper floor near this opening, and dust and cobwebs in the room, also some sacks and lumber; that he went to the building on the morning of the fire about 15 minutes after 5 o'clock; that he went in and got some feed, and then went through and milked his cow on the other side of the railroad track, and then came back and through the building again and then to his breakfast; that one Frank Ross had been in charge of the machinery until midnight the night before, after which no one was in charge; that he returned to the building about 7 o'clock, and remained there until about 9:15 o'clock; that he, during this time, went through the building, first to the boiler room to see the condition of the fire, and found that it was banked and in good condition, and he did not disturb it; that he examined the condition of the furnace, and everything was all right and the fire well banked; that he then went upstairs, opened the doors, and swept the first floor; that he then figured up some coal accounts and did a little bookwork and writing; that he saw a train pass while he was in the electric plant office; that when it passed he heard cinders rattle on the southeast window; that it sounded like the rattling of hail; that he remained there until a drayman drove up with a package and delivered it to him; that he then went out to a storage room northwest of the building, where he had his workshop, at which time it was about 15 minutes after the train had passed; that in a few minutes he started to the barn of his residence, just across the street; that as he was crossing Mr. and Mrs. Southwell, who were driving in a buggy, came along, and as they passed Mr. Southwell halloed at him, and said there must be something wrong; that he then looked back at the plant and saw a little smoke coming out from under the eaves; that from his position he could only see the northwest side of the building; that he ran back quickly and tried to get into the office, but, as he could not get the door open quickly, he went around to the engine room and broke in; that then he attempted to get upstairs on the second floor; that then he found that the whole southeast part of the building was on fire from bottom to top; that he then tied the whistle down so as to give alarm; that when he came from tying down the whistle the fire was all in the southeast part of the room, and the first place the flames broke through was through the broken window; and that the time from the passage of the train until his attention was called to the fire was about 15 minutes. It was shown that the window in question was 35 feet above the level of the railroad track, and that the day was mostly clear, and that a brisk wind was blowing from the southeast. There was testimony to the effect that the track declined as it approached plaintiff's building, that the engine pulling the train, after it left the depot, was throwing cinder sparks as high as the telegraph poles; but no one testified that it was throwing sparks when near respondent's building, save and except the statement of respondent that they rattled on the window panes of his office. There was evidence offered on the part of defendant, the tendency of which was to show that, within a very few minutes after the train passed, the building was burning rapidly, and before it could have been started by a spark from defendant's engine.

The argument of appellant is that there is no evidence going to show that a spark emitted from the engine going downhill could or did throw sparks a distance of 50 feet, and upward 35 feet from a level of the said bed, so as to enter the broken pane of glass in the second story of the building. In estimating the height, we must make allowance for about 10 feet, the distance from the level of the track and the top of the smokestack. As we have seen, the engine, when it left the depot, was throwing sparks as high as the tops of the telegraph poles, and that, when it came near respondent's mills, it was throwing them so as to reach the window in the first story of the building 50 feet away. If respondent is to be believed, which was a question for the jury, sparks were carried that distance and height, unless we are to conclude that it was an impossibility.

Appellant's position is based mostly on two decisions, one by the St. Louis Court of Appeals, and the other by the Supreme Court. In the first mentioned the court said: "In this case we face not only a lack of direct evidence to show sparks from the engine, that was heard to go by after midnight, set fire to decedent's house, but a lack of direct evidence to show sparks escaped from it. The precise question for decision therefore is: Is it so generally known to persons of average intelligence that a locomotive drawing a heavy load on an ascending grade throws sparks, or cinders, 50 feet away, and hot enough to ignite the roof of a house if they happen to fall on one?" etc. The court answers the question in the negative. Gibbs v. Railroad, 104 Mo. App. 276, 78 S. W. 835. In the second case it is said: "No evidence was introduced to prove the possibility of the fire being ignited by sparks thrown off by defendant's engine at the distance, whatever that may have been, it was seen to throw them; and some proof of the kind was required." Campbell v. Railroad, 121 Mo. 340, 25 S. W. 936, 25 L. R. A. 175, 42 Am. St. Rep. 530. In the latter case, however, the court said: "The facts that live sparks were thrown from engines, and did ignite grass, and other combustible materials, would tend to prove the probability that the fire was communicated from an engine." The evidence was held sufficient to authorize a verdict for plaintiff. In the later case of Manning v. Railroad, 119 S. W. 464, the St. Louis Court of Appeals (which was similar in principle) reiterated what was said in Gibbs v. Railroad, supra, that there was a lack of proof that defendant's engine communicated the fire. There is a marked difference in the facts in the two cases in the St. Louis Court of Appeals, and the one under consideration, and a much stronger case was made out in this than in that of Campbell v. Railroad, supra, where the plaintiff was permitted to recover.

Here the evidence shows that the engine in question did throw sparks to a great height, and was throwing them at the time it passed plaintiff's building. There was a brisk wind but there is no direct proof that any were carried so high as the broken pane of glass in the second story thereof. That sparks may have been thrown to such an elevation may be implied from the circumstances. It is true that, under ordinary conditions, without the interference of the wind, sparks emitted from any engine, however prone to throw sparks, would not throw them to any great distance, because their course would be mostly in a direct line upward, and they would descend by the force of gravitation in the same manner; but we do not think there can be any doubt but what sparks thrown off from a burning building or emitted from a locomotive engine during a strong wind may be carried to a much greater distance than 50 feet and much higher than 25 feet. As a matter of course, the height and distance to which they could be carried would depend greatly upon the force with which the sparks were emitted and the force of the wind, and it is safe to say that such is known to all persons of average intelligence. The probability is that the fire could have been communicated in no other way than from sparks emitted from defendant's engine, unless it was set by plaintiff himself. According to his statements, he had just previous to its discovery examined the building, and there was no evidence of fire anywhere, except in the furnace, which had been banked. The mill and the electric machinery were not in operation, and had not been since midnight. But it is not for the court to say that plaintiff committed perjury, as the jury was the sole judge of his credibility, and, as they evidently believed he told the truth, that was an end to the matter. It is probable that a live spark was carried by the force of the wind to the upper story, and that it entered through the opening and fell upon the cliaff or other combustible material and ignited the fire that consumed the building. The evidence in the most positive character tends to prove that the fire could have originated in no other manner. The process of reasoning, by excluding every other means by which the fire could have been started, tends to support the theory that it was by means of sparks thrown out by defendant's engine.

This case seems to fall within the rule that, where the evidence shows no more than a probability that the source of a fire was a railroad engine, it is sufficient to submit to the jury. Lead Co. v. Railway Co., 123 Mo. App. 394, 101 S. W. 636; Tapley v. Railway Co., 129 Mo. App. 88, 107 S. W. 470; Matthews v. Railroad, 142 Mo. 645, 44 S. W. 802; Campbell v. Railroad, supra.

For the reasons given, the cause is affirmed. All concur.

Appeal from Circuit Court, De Kalb County; Alonzo D. Burns, Judge.

Garnishment proceedings by Susie Beauchamp Graham, as assignee, of separate judgments in favor of John T. Kimberlin, George Shrenk, and Elijah Groom, against Henry C. Gordon, defendant, Grant U. ment further provided that a verdict should be rendered disposing of the issues in each case separately. All are proceedings in garnishment under executions issued under three different judgments. The first, in favor of John T. Kimberlin against H. C. Gordon, was rendered by the circuit court of De Kalb county, February 9, 1906, on a note dated February 16, 1904. The second is in favor of George Shrenk against said Gordon on a note dated January 8, 1905, and transcript of which was filed in the circuit clerk's office January 20, 1906. The third was in favor of Elijah Groom against H. C. Gordon, rendered May 15, 1906, on a note dated March 22, 1902. Each of said judgments have been assigned to Susie B. Graham upon which the executions were issued to her use, and Grant U. Brown, who had in his hands certain money alleged to be the property of the defendant H. C. Gordon, was summoned as garnishee. The answer of the garnishee disclosed that George Teegarden claimed the fund, whereupon he was made a party. He made answer, claiming said money. The plaintiffs replied, denying such ownership, and the issue thus made was tried by the court. The finding in each case was in favor of the interpleader. The plaintiffs appealed.

H. C. Gordon, the judgment debtor, was married to Florence, his present wife, in October, 1899. She was a widow, and at the time of the last marriage had about $1,000 she had realized from a policy on the life of her deceased husband. She also claimed to be the owner of a dwelling in Clarksdale, but the title to which was in her late husband, and she was also the mother of three children. On December 8, 1899, she and her then husband, the defendant, traded with Dallas C. White for 80 acres of land in De Kalb county, which was incumbered by a trust deed for $1,600, for the benefit of the Prudential Life Insurance Company. She claims that in payment for the land she put in the said dwelling, at the valuation of $600, $500 in money, and the defendant put in a stock of goods at $800, which were incumbered by a mortgage for that amount. It was shown that on the 11th day of December, 1899, defendant transferred the debt from the stock of goods by giving a lien on the land, whereby the lien on the goods was released. The deed from Dallas and wife was made to defendant and his wife. They moved onto this land, and occupied it until they sold it to one Dyers in January, 1902. On the 4th day of March, 1901, Florence and the defendant, for the expressed consideration of $3,500, conveyed the land to Asa Martin subject to the incumbrance to the said insurance company and the $900 trust deed aforesaid. On the same day the said Brooks reconveyed the land to defendant and his wife, Florence, also for the expressed consideration of $3,500, and also subject to the foregoing incumbrances. The deed contained the following recitations: "Subject to a trust deed to the Prudential Life Insurance Co., for $1,600; also subject to a trust deed given to W. B. Brooks for $900, and also the said Florence to have extra over and above, H. C. Gordon, eleven hundred dollars."

In January, 1902, H. C. Gordon and wife, Florence, sold this 80 acres to F. N. and Albert Dyer for $3,400, subject to two deeds of trust, the one for $1,600 and one for $900. Mrs. Gordon placed $1,000 of the money in the Bank of Clarksdale, where it remained until the purchase of the 66½ acres in question, which was purchased at a partition sale July 2, 1902, at the price and sum of $2,706, which $1,000 was paid on the purchase, and $1,700 was furnished by the Bank of Clarksdale, until a loan could be negotiated from the Hoagland Loan & Investment Company. Said loan was secured by a trust deed on the land. The deed to the 66½ acres was taken in the names of H. C. Gordon and Florence Gordon, his wife. They moved onto this land, and continued to occupy it until they sold it to the interpleader, George Teegarden, subject to the two trust deeds then upon it, $1,700 and $425, respectively. Shortly after the execution of the $1,700 trust deed to the Hoagland Loan & Investment Company, H. C. Gordon borrowed for his own use $425 from A. J. Dean, and secured said loan by a second mortgage on this same tract, and when the $425 loan came due, he borrowed the same amount from Mr. L. L. Chappelle, and took up that loan and secured Mr. Chappelle by a like mortgage. On the 20th day of May, 1907, H. C. Gordon and wife, Florence, sold and conveyed to the interpleader, George Teegarden, the land in question, for the expressed consideration of $3,630, and executed a warranty deed therefor, containing the following recitation: "Subject to one trust deed executed by the grantors to Benjamin R. Vineyard, in trust for the Hoagland Loan & Investment Co., for seventeen hundred dollars, date Oct. 31, 1902." "Also subject to trust deed executed by the grantors herein to Grant U. Brown in trust for Lorenzo L. Chappelle to secure $425." The purchase price of this land, over and above the amount of the two incumbrances recited and referred to in their deed to Teegarden, something like $1,400, was paid to H. C. Gordon by Teegarden at the Bank of Clarksdale, and by Gordon delivered to his wife, Florence. Immediately after the payment of the money by Teegarden to Gordon, R. A. Hewitt, who was holding the deed in escrow, was directed by Gordon and Teegarden to file same for record, which was done, and the deed delivered to Teegarden. The $425 due L. L. Chappelle having become due, default in the payment having been made, the land was advertised under the trust deed, and sold on the 28th day of October, 1907, at which said sale George Teegarden, and the attorney representing Mrs. Graham, the execution creditor of H. C. Gordon, were the only bidders, and the land was knocked down amount of his bid. Whereupon Teegarden (the interpleader) paid the amount of his bid, and after the debt, interest, and costs of the sale were paid, there remained in the trustee's hands $1,844.

The appellants challenge the correctness of the statement that Mrs. Gordon put into the land purchased from Dallas White the sum of $1,100. The purchase price of the land was $3,200. There was an incumbrance on it for $1,600. Gordon put in his stock of goods for $800, and Mrs. Gordon claims she put in $500 cash and house in Clarksdale at $600, whole amount thus said to be paid $3,500, or $300 more than the purchase price. Appellant claims from these figures that she could have only put into the land the $500 in cash. Therefore she did not have $1,100 to invest in the 66½ acres the proceeds of which are in controversy. And, furthermore, the testimony goes to show that the house in Clarksdale was the property of her former husband, and that the administrator sold it for the purpose of paying his debts, and the records show the latter fact. But it further appears that Mrs. Gordon claimed to be the owner of the house. It was not shown that the money received by the administrator was applied to the payment of debts. If it had been so applied, it was within the power and it was the duty of appellants to have so shown. The report of sale recites that the purchaser at said sale was Dallas White. The statement of respondent is that, in order to vest the title to the house in White as a part of the consideration for the land, the order of sale to pay debts was resorted to. Under the evidence it was a question of fact for the court. Appellants contend that it is not reasonable to infer that the administrator would indulge in such an unwarranted proceeding. And in the absence of evidence the inference would be that he did not. But evidence of the most positive kind shows that he did. And it is just as positive as that which goes to show that Gordon put in his $800 stock of goods as a part of the consideration. There is the discrepancy of $300 remaining over paid for the land. The evidence does not disclose of what it consisted. The court found from the statement of witnesses that it was not to be attributed to Mrs. Gordon's share of the payments. We conclude that the finding was based upon the preponderance of the most credible evidence, and as such is binding on this court.

The evidence shows that the interpleader was to pay for the 66.5 acres of land $3,960. Of this sum he paid $1,480 to Florence, the wife, and the two incumbrances on the land which he paid amounted to $2,125, making a total of $3,605 paid, which left in the hands of the garnishee $355, which appellant claims 80 acres he put in as payment $800 worth of goods, which were mortgaged for that amount. This mortgage he discharged by placing a deed of trust on the land for a similar amount, which he never paid. This the evidence seems to bear out. But, as the court found that defendant had an interest in the land, and, admitting such to have been the fact, the interpleader contends that the surplus in his hands of $355, which represents that interest, was not subject to the garnishment, as it was the proceeds derived from the sale of defendant's homestead. The 80-acre tract was occupied by defendant and wife as a homestead until they sold it in January, 1902. The proceeds of this sale was the only money that went into the purchase of the 66.5 acres in July, 1902. Upon this land defendant and wife made their home until it was sold to the interpleader. However, just shortly before such sale, defendant made an entry on government land in the state of Colorado. Appellant insists that by so doing the defendant abandoned his homestead right to the land in controversy. But we think not. It is true his conduct was such as to indicate that such was his intention. It cannot be said that because of such intention that there was any actual abandonment. That could only have occurred by some overt act, such as actually moving away from it without any intention to return. He did not give up his possession until he sold to interpleader. Smith v. Bunn, 75 Mo. 559; Duffey v. Willis, 99 Mo. 132, 12 S. W. 520. There can be no question that a homesteader may sell his homestead, and that the purchaser steps into his shoes and takes the property free from the lien of all judgments on demands originating after the acquisition of the homestead, or homestead purchased with the proceeds of the former. The surplus was a part of the proceeds of defendant's homestead, and as such was not subject to garnishment.

Plaintiff contends that, as the estate in the land held by defendant or his wife was not an estate by entirety, it cannot be considered as a homestead. As there was not the usual granting clause in the deed to defendant and wife, under the authority of certain decisions, it is true they cannot be considered tenants by entirety. Wilson v. Frost, 186 Mo. 311, 85 S. W. 375, 105 Am. St. Rep. 619; Harrison v. McReynolds, 183 Mo. 533, 82 S. W. 120. But the recitation in the deed constituted them tenants in common. Id. A homestead in the husband may attach to an estate in land held by husband and wife, where they both own an interest in the same. Hart v. Leete, 104 Mo. 315, 15 S. W. 976. Appellant insists that interpleader should not be heard on this phase of the question, because he makes the claim for the first time in this court. However that may be, the record shows that there was no declaration of law given or asked, and we cannot know upon what theory interpleader submitted his case, or upon what theory the court decided it. We hold, as the trial court did in effect, that the surplus proceeds of the sale of the equity of redemption of defendant and his wife were not subject to garnishment under the judgments, and it is of no consequence to us upon what theory the cause was tried and judgment rendered. Even should it have been misconceived, we must uphold it if it is the progeny of good law.

A controversy arose also over some personal property, part of which was claimed by the wife and a part by her son. It is insisted that the evidence did not justify the finding. But, as there was some evidence to it, we will not disturb it.

It is ordered that each of said cases be affirmed. All concur.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 237*)—CLAIMS—DECREE.

A judgment of the probate court allowing a claim against the estate of a deceased widow is res judicata to the extent of the establishment of the debt in proceedings to charge the debt against the estate of the deceased husband, leaving a will giving his wife the use of his estate for life, with gift over after her death on the payment of her debts.

In a suit to charge the estate of a deceased husband, leaving a will whereby he gave his wife the use of his estate for life, with gift over after her death, on the payment of her debts, for a debt of the wife, the executors and devisees are proper parties, as the devisees are entitled to the remainder, and the executors are, by the will, authorized to convey the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 872.*]

4. WILLS (§ 872*)—CREDITORS OF DEVISEE—CLAIMS—ENFORCEMENT—REMEDY.

A proceeding to establish a charge against the estate of a deceased husband, leaving a will whereby he gave to his wife the use of his estate for life, with gift over after her death and the payment of her debts, for a debt of the wife is by bill in equity.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Macon County; Nat M. Shelton, Judge.

Action by Della Pierce against James K. Pierce and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and rendered.

R. S. Matthews & Son, H. A. White, and R. W. Barrow, for appellant. B. R. Dysart and A. A. Gilstrap, for respondents.

BROADBUSH, P. J. This is a suit in equity to charge the estate of John C. Pierce with a debt contracted by his wife subsequent to his death. John C. Pierce died testate on the 4th day of March, 1900. By the terms of his will his wife was to have the use of all his estate, with rents and profits during her life, and the remainder he disposed of in the following language: "After the death of my said wife, and the payment of her lawful debts and funeral expenses, it is my will that all the rest and remainder of my property both real and personal, be sold and reduced to money, for the purpose of distribution among my children and descendants as hereinafter provided, and my executors hereinafter named are hereby fully authorized and empowered to sell and convey the same, and execute bills of sale and deeds of conveyance necessary and appropriate to convey and vest the title to said property and real estate in the purchaser." The deceased owned little or no personal property at his death. He owned, however, certain real estate which the plaintiff by these proceedings seeks to charge with the indebtedness of the widow, Paulina. Paulina, the widow, died in September, 1904, more than four years after the death of her husband. She died leaving no estate. An administrator, however, was appointed by the probate court, and the plaintiff presented a claim for allowance against her estate for services to the deceased rendered after the death of her husband, which the court allowed, amounting to the sum of $1,100. It is this judgment that plaintiff seeks to charge against the said real estate of the deceased testator. The executors and the devisees are all made parties. The judgment of the court was for the defendants, and the plaintiff appealed.

We assume from the argument of the respective parties that the court tried the case upon the theory that the judgment of the probate court in plaintiff's favor against the administrator of the estate of said Paulina it. 2 Black on Judgments, § 600. There need not, however, in all cases be an identity of the subject-matter, identity of the cause of action, and identity of persons and parties to the suit, for it is a fundamental rule that a former judgment, when offered as evidence in a second action between the same parties or their privies, is conclusive upon every question involved within the issues in such former suit. Id. § 609. The judgment of the probate court was a judgment establishing an indebtedness against the estate of Paulina, and as such is res adjudicata in so far as it goes to establish such indebtedness. By the provisions of the will the estate of the deceased was charged with such indebtedness, which was made a prior lien. This is not a proceeding to charge defendants personally, or their estate, with the debts of the wife, but to charge the estate itself. It is therefore in the nature of a proceeding in rem. The defendants were necessary parties to the suit by reason of the fact that they were entitled to the remainder. And it may be said that they stand in the relation of privies to that extent. It is held that the proper proceeding in a case like this is by bill in equity. Presbyterian Church v. McElhinney, 61 Mo. 540.

The defendants insist that the claim is barred by the two years statute of limitations (Rev. St. 1899, § 185 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 399]), as more than that period of time had expired since administration was had upon the estate of the testator. But we cannot conceive how the statute has any application, as the debt was not his own, but one that his will provided should be a charge against his estate, if contracted by his wife during her life, however long or short it might be.

Under the evidence offered, plaintiff made out her case. It is therefore ordered that the case be reversed, and judgment entered for the amount of the judgment. All concur.

4. CARRIERS (§ 382*)—EJECTION OF TRESPASSER—EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.

Where a freight brakeman ordered plaintiff to get off a freight train which plaintiff had boarded under the impression that it carried passengers, and, when plaintiff started down the ladder of a car to get off when the train slowed up, the brakeman commenced throwing coal at him, striking him on the head and arm, and after plaintiff had jumped off the brakeman again threw a lump of coal, which struck plaintiff on the ankle and injured him, the court did not err in authorizing exemplary damages.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Cooper County; Wm. H. Martin, Judge.

Action by Cole Marcum against the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. P. B. Jackson, for appellant. W. V. Draffen and Jeffries & Corum, for respondent.

ELLISON, J. This action is for personal injury, in which plaintiff obtained judgment in the trial court. The defendant, claiming that plaintiff had not made out a case, demurred to the evidence in his behalf and did not introduce any in defense. Plaintiff desired to go from Franklin Junction to Booneville, and, being informed that one of defendant's freight trains carried passengers, boarded it as it was moving out. He was near the front end, and, fearing the speed would be too great, when the rear reached him he boarded it from the front end by climbing up on the car, intending to walk back over the train to the caboose. He was discovered by one of defendant's brakemen and told that the train did not carry passengers and ordered to get off. Plaintiff stated he thought it a local freight which carried passengers. They disputed for a time; plaintiff saying he would get off if the brakeman would slow up the train so he could do so. The brakeman swore at him, declared he should get off, and went back to the engine, got a "clinker hook," and came to him, again demanding that he get off, and plaintiff again asked that the train be slowed up. Then the brakeman signaled to the engineer to slow up, and, when the train had begun to go slower, plaintiff "started down the ladder of the car, so when he got slowed up enough for me I could drop off." Then the brakeman commenced throwing coal at him, striking him on the head and arm. He found he would have to drop off to prevent being hit again, and did so by jumping and running with the train. Then the brakeman again threw a lump of coal, striking him on the ankle and injuring him. It is not necessary to go further into the manner of plaintiff's injury, since the case turns on the question of the brakeman's authority to act for defendant in putting him off the train.

It has been determined in this state that merely showing that one was a brakeman on a train did not show he had authority to put persons off who were claimed not to be rightfully on; that the duty of a brakeman, merely, did not include the charge of passengers or trespassers; and that, in order to hold the company for the act of the brakeman, it was necessary to show authority given to the brakeman in addition to his ordinary duty of attending on the train itself. Farber v. Railway Co., 116 Mo. 81, 22 S. W. 631, 20 L. R. A. 350; Krueger v. Railway Co., 84 Mo. App. 358; Krueger v. Railway Co., 94 Mo. App. 458, 68 S. W. 220; Curtis v. Railway Co., 99 Mo. App. 502, 73 S. W. 1103. In this case matter was brought out in direct and cross examination of witnesses as to the rules of the defendant concerning the duties of brakemen. We will assume that such rules showed that brakemen were prohibited from interfering with passengers or trespassers except under direction of the conductor; but there was evidence which tended to show that defendant's brakemen did customarily put persons off who were not entitled to be transported on freight trains, and that this was done with the knowledge of defendant's officers. This was proper evidence, and, when believed, it will establish the brakeman's authority, notwithstanding rules to the contrary. Charlton v. Railway Co., 200 Mo. 413, 442, 98 S. W. 529; Farber v. Railway Co., 139 Mo., loc. cit. 278, 40 S. W. 932; Farber v. Railway Co., 116 Mo., loc. cit. 94, 22 S. W. 631, 20 L. R. A. 350; Krueger v. Railway Co., 94 Mo. App. 458, 463, 68 S. W. 220.

Complaint is made of an instruction authorizing the jury to allow exemplary damages; but the jury gave no heed to it, as none were allowed. It was not error, under the evidence, to give it.

So complaint is made of the refusal of defendant's instruction directing the jury not to consider the act of the brakeman in throwing the coal and striking plaintiff after he had reached the ground from the car. The instruction was properly refused. O'Brien v. Transit Co., 185 Mo. 263, 84 S. W. 939, 105 Am. St. Rep. 592.

Defendant has submitted a full argument on the case made by plaintiff, and, after consideration of all the points made therein, we feel that we would not be justified in interfering with this judgment, and it is, accordingly, affirmed. All concur.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY (§ 194*)—CO-SURETIES—CONTRIBUTION.

Plaintiff signed, as surety, a note to defendant, who afterwards sold it to a bank. When it became due, it was taken up, and another given to the bank in lieu thereof by all three parties, and it was thereafter renewed in the same way. Held, that plaintiff and defendant thereby became co-sureties for the maker, and plaintiff was entitled to contribution on paying the judgment rendered on the last note.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Benton County; Chas. A. Denton, Judge.

Action by Rebecca C. Wilson against G. S. Kieffer. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Bruce Barnett, for appellant. Henry P. Lay, for respondent.

ELLISON, J. This is an action for contribution on account of an alleged payment of the full amount of a judgment rendered on a promissory note, upon which plaintiff and defendant were sureties. The judgment in the trial court was for the defendant.

It seems that one Louis W. Wilson was indebted to defendant for a stock of goods sold to him by defendant, and that afterwards such indebtedness was put in the form of a note payable to defendant, due at a future date, and that this plaintiff signed such note, with Louis W. Wilson as his surety; that afterwards this defendant sold and indorsed the note to a bank, and became liable to the bank by such indorsement. When it became due, it was taken up, and one given to the bank in lieu thereof by all three, Louis Wilson, this plaintiff, and defendant. There were several renewals in the same way until the one on which the judgment was rendered, which plaintiff paid. From this it seems clear that plaintiff and defendant were co-sureties for Louis Wilson. In the first place plaintiff was alone surety for him. Then when that note was not paid to the bank to which it had been sold and indorsed by defendant, it was taken up by Louis Wilson executing a new note to the note last mentioned, the parties bore the same relation to it. We regard the evidence as establishing a payment of the judgment by plaintiff. She, therefore, paid a judgment on an obligation in which defendant was jointly bound with her as surety. Plaintiff should therefore have recovered in the trial court.

The judgment will therefore be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to enter judgment for the plaintiff for the amount paid by her, with interest. All concur.

SUBLETTE et al. v. BREWINGTON et al.
(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri. Nov. 1, 1909. Rehearing Denied Dec. 6, 1909.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 209*)—NEGOTIATION—DELIVERY.

Where a note is negotiable under the law merchant and Laws 1905, p. 243, § 1 (Ann. St. 1906, § 463-1), and is payable to order, it will not pass by mere delivery, section 30 of the act of 1905 providing that a negotiable instrument, if payable to order, is negotiated by the indorsement of the holder completed by delivery, which indorsement, under section 31, must be written on the instrument itself or upon a paper attached thereto, and the transferees thereof, so far as their liability is determined by the law governing the transfer of negotiable instruments payable to order, would be holders with notice of whatever equities the makers might have.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 423-427, 497-501; Dec. Dig. § 209.*]

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 109*)—ACTS OF AGENT—LIABILITY OF PRINCIPAL.

Plaintiffs made a person their agent to negotiate a loan upon the credit of their note payable to the agent's order, which would necessarily become the property of whoever advanced the money thereon. The agent's authority was complete, and he turned over the note unindorsed as collateral security for a loan to himself. Held that, as between plaintiffs and the agent, the law merchant did not apply, but plaintiffs' rights depended upon the rules governing the relation of principal and agent, and the acts of the agent, being within the scope, or apparent scope, of his authority, were binding upon plaintiffs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 318-322; Dec. Dig. § 109.*]

3. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 109*)—ACTS OF AGENT—LIABILITY OF PRINCIPAL.

The agent, in the exercise of his authority as such, having dealt with strangers to their prejudice, plaintiffs could not plead want of consideration as a basis of recovery against the transferees.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Adair County;
Nat M. Shelton, Judge.

Action by D. W. Sublette and another against George R. Brewington and another.

A. Donaghy, for appellants. H. F. Milham, for respondents.

BROADDUS, P. J. This is a suit to restrain defendants from disposing of a certain promissory note, and asking for its cancellation. On January 8, 1906, the plaintiffs applied to E. L. Hilbert to procure for them a loan of $1,000, for the period of one year. For the purpose of obtaining the loan, they executed and delivered their promissory note for said sum of $1,000, due in one year, payable to the order of said Hilbert. Hilbert, with one of the plaintiffs, applied to several persons to get them to advance the money on the note, but failed to get such advance. The plaintiffs then went home. Afterwards communication by telephone was had between the plaintiffs and Hilbert as to whether the latter had succeeded in securing the loan. The matter was left in this condition until in April, when plaintiffs, according to their statements, saw Hilbert for the purpose of taking up the note, when he informed them that he had destroyed it. Thereafter, on the 2d of October, 1906, several months before the maturity of the note, Hilbert borrowed from defendants $814, and executed his note to them for that amount and turned over to them the note in suit, without indorsement, as collateral security. The defendants took the note in good faith in the belief that Hilbert was its owner. The judgment of the court was for the defendants, and plaintiffs appealed.

The note in question was a negotiable instrument as defined in section 1, Act 1905, p. 243 (Ann. St. 1906, § 463-1), entitled "Negotiable Instruments," and is such under the law merchant, and, being payable to order, it did not pass by the mere act of delivery. Section 30, Acts 1905, pp. 247, 248, is as follows: "An instrument is negotiated when it is transferred from one person to another in such manner as to constitute the transferee holder thereof. If payable to bearer it is negotiated by delivery; if payable to order it is negotiated by the indorsement of the holder completed by delivery." Section 31: "The indorsement must be written on the instrument itself or upon a paper attached thereto. The signature of the indorser, without additional words, is a sufficient indorsement." If the case is to be determined by the law governing the transfer of negotiable instruments payable to order, the defendants are holders with notice of whatever equities plaintiff may have had. The defendants' defense is based upon the ground that, as Hilbert was the agent of plaintiffs, the law merchant does not control, but the question is one of agency.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

With this view we coincide. That Hilbert was the agent of plaintiffs to negotiate a loan by means of the note is undeniable. His duty was to obtain a loan upon the credit of plaintiffs' note, which as a matter of course would necessarily become the property of whoever could be induced to advance the money on the security offered. His authority was complete. In effect he was empowered to dispose of the paper as freely as if it had been his own. The face of the paper, in fact, was a notice to strangers that it was his property; and it was not issued in due course of business.

There is no question better settled than that the acts of the agent (within the scope or apparent scope of his authority) are binding upon the principal. We cannot escape the conclusion that the case falls within the rule governing the relation of agent and principal, and that the law merchant does not apply. Furthermore, we are of the opinion that the plaintiffs have no equity as against defendants, and that the transfer to defendants was for a sufficient valuable consideration. It does not lie in the mouth of a party to plead want of consideration where his agent in the exercise of his authority as such deals with a stranger to his prejudice.

We believe the judgment of the court was for the right party, and it is therefore affirmed. All concur.

MEMORANDUM DECISIONS.

TYLER et al. v. TYLER et al. (Court of Appeals of Kentucky. Dec. 3, 1909.) Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Chancery Branch, First Division. "Not to be officially reported." Suit between Isaac Tyler and others and Owen Tyler and others. From the judgment, the former parties appeal. Affirmed. E. L. McDonald, for appellants. Trabue, Doolan & Cox, for appellees.

HOBSON, J. Considering all the provisions of the will in question, and the facts shown by the record, we are of opinion that the chancellor did not err in the conclusion he reached. Judgment affirmed.

HANEY v. STATE. (Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 24, 1909.) Appeal from District Court, Palo Pinto County; W. J. Oxford, Judge. Rube Haney was convicted of burglary, and he appeals. Affirmed. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. Appellant was convicted of the crime of burglary; his punishment being assessed at two years' confinement in the penitentiary. There are no bills of exceptions incorporated in the record. The motion for new trial alleges the insufficiency of the evidence to support the conviction, that the court erred in forcing the defendant into trial without the witness Rickles, and that, therefore, he did not have a fair trial. So far as the record is concerned, there is no application for continuance, and no bill of exceptions reserved to the ruling of the court. We have examined the evidence carefully, and are of opinion that it is sufficient, and deem it unnecessary to recapitulate or state the evidence. The jury were fully justified in reaching the conclusion that appellant was guilty as charged. The judgment is affirmed.

BROOKS, J., absent.

HARRIS v. STATE. (Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Oct. 27, 1909.) Appeal from Kaufman County Court; Thos. R. Bond, Judge. Jim Harris was convicted of violating the local option law, and he appeals. Affirmed. See, also, infra. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROOKS, J. Appellant was convicted of violating the local option law, and his punishment assessed at a fine of $25 and 20 days' imprisonment in the county jail. There is no statement of facts nor bill of exceptions contained in the record. No error appearing, the judgment is affirmed.

HARRIS v. STATE. (Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Oct. 27, 1909.) Appeal from Kaufman County Court; Thos. R. Bond, Judge. Jim Harris was convicted of violating the local option law, and he appeals. Affirmed. See, also, supra. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROOKS, J. Appellant was convicted of violating the local option law, and his punishment assessed at a fine of $25 and 20 days' imprisonment in the county jail.

There is neither a statement of the facts nor a bill of exceptions in the record. There is no error apparent in the record, and the judgment is in all things affirmed.

LEWIS v. STATE. (Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Nov. 3, 1909.) Appeal from Hill County Court; Horton B. Porter, Judge. Love Lewis was convicted of violating the local option law, and he appeals. Affirmed. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. Appellant was convicted of violating the local option law, and his punishment assessed at a fine of $25 and 20 days' imprisonment in the county jail. As the record comes to us, there is neither bill of exceptions nor statement of facts. The indictment is valid. In this state of the record, it follows, of necessity, there is no question which we can review, and the judgment of conviction is affirmed.

I. NATURE AND REQUISITES.

(A) Acquisition of Rights by Prescription in General.

§ 13. One held to have acquired title by adverse possession.—Hardy v. Samuels (Ark.) 654.

§ 13. "Requisites of possession to vest title" defined.—Jones v. Weaver (Tex. Civ. App.) 619.

(B) Actual Possession.

§ 16. Any visible or notorious acts clearly showing an intention to claim by adverse possession held sufficient.—McComb v. Saxe (Ark.) 987.

§ 16. Evidence held to establish title by adverse possession.—Nall v. Conover (Mo.) 1039.

§ 20. If improvements, such as building houses, opening fields, etc., made by defendant's grantor on land, claimed by defendant by the adverse possession of such grantor, were located on the land claimed, it was immaterial on what particular part of the land they were located.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 403.

(C) Visible and Notorious Possession.

§ 30. Defendant's possession of land held sufficiently notorious to give title by adverse possession.—McComb v. Saxe (Ark.) 987.

§ 30. If one entered upon land under a duly recorded deed, and held open and notorious possession thereof, it was immaterial to his right to claim by adverse possession whether any one actually knew of his claim and possession.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 403.

§ 31. One who entered upon land under a duly recorded deed thereto, and held it adversely to the world, need not otherwise repudiate the title of others claiming the land, or notify them of his claim of title, in order to set limitations running.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 403.

§ 31. The possession of a small part of a 160-acre tract held not sufficient to ripen into title to the 160 acres by adverse possession.—Jones v. Weaver (Tex. Civ. App.) 619.

§ 41. An adverse claim made shortly before the beginning of the action in which the adverse claim was set up was not available to give title by adverse possession.—Kidd v. Bell (Ky.) 232.

§ 41. Where persons did not hold possession of land under title, or color of title, from the sovereignty of the soil, their chain of title not extending to the original grantee, they could not claim under three years' limitation.—Barrera v. Guerra (Tex. Civ. App.) 902.

§ 44. That the fence by which an adverse claimant inclosed land was occasionally broken by spring floods did not break the continuity of his possession.—McComb v. Saxe (Ark.) 987.

§ 44. Even if a tenant agreed to hold possession of a league of land for one claiming title thereto, there was no title by limitations, through such tenant, where the evidence did not show continued possession of the tenant or of persons claiming under him, acknowledging the title of the claimant and exercising the right of possession of the entire league.—Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Kimball (Tex.) 533.

§ 50. Where a landlord is in adverse possession through a tenant, his possession is not destroyed by the tenant's attornment to a stranger.—Saxton v. Corbett (Tex. Civ. App.) 75.

§ 53. Where plaintiffs had possession through tenants, a hiatus between the tenants' abandonment without notice to plaintiffs and defendants' entry held not to establish plaintiffs' abandonment of their possessory rights.—Saxton v. Corbett (Tex. Civ. App.) 75.

(F) Hostile Character of Possession.

§ 65. One entering and holding land under the belief that it is vacant public land, with the intention of acquiring title from the state, is not holding adversely to the true owner.—Jones v. Weaver (Tex. Civ. App.) 619.

§ 71. The three-year statute of limitation does not protect one not deraining title from the state.—Haring v. Shelton (Tex.) 13.

§ 71. Defendants held not to have color of title from a sovereignty of the soil essential to a claim of adverse possession under the three-year statute of limitations.—Saxton v. Corbett (Tex. Civ. App.) 75.

§ 71. A deed held not a mere quitclaim or option to purchase as to three-fourths of the league of land conveyed thereby, but a deed of the whole league, sufficient to support a claim under the 5-year limitations, or sufficient, as a memorandum of title, to support a claim under the 10-year limitations.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 403.

§ 82. The five-year statute of limitation does not protect one claiming under a deed from an individual where he does not show the date of the recording of the deed.—Haring v. Shelton (Tex.) 13.

§ 82. Where the record of a married woman's deed conveying her separate property showed that an essential part of the certificate of acknowledgment was omitted, the deed was not "duly recorded" so as to support a plea of title by limitations.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 403.

§ 82. Where title was complete in defendant's remote grantor at the latter's death, it was immaterial to defendant's right to claim title by adverse possession that deeds of subsequent grantors were not recorded a sufficient length of time before the commencement of the action to base a claim by limitations thereon.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 403.

and making improvements thereon, held to show prima facie that such possession and use were based upon the deed, and a claim of title to the entire tract thereunder.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 403.

(G) Payment of Taxes.

§ 86. Where persons in possession of land have paid no taxes thereon, they have obtained no title by five years' limitation.—Barrera v. Guerra (Tex. Civ. App.) 902.

§ 95. It is presumed, in trespass to try title to land claimed by adverse possession, that one residing on land under a deed thereto, and who is admitted to have paid the taxes, paid them for himself, and not for another.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 403.

II. OPERATION AND EFFECT.

(A) Extent of Possession.

§ 96. In order to establish title by limitations to a league of land by the possession of tenants, there must be possession by the tenants or those claiming under them of the entire league in the name of the claimant.—Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Kimball (Tex.) 533.

§ 96. Where the boundaries of a lot were clearly marked, possession of plaintiff, through his tenants, of a part of the lot, perfected title by limitation to the well-defined limits of the whole lot.—Washam v. Harrison (Tex. Civ. App.) 52.

§ 100. Where defendant thought that a tract which he fenced and on which he erected a barn was a part of land he had purchased, and did not then know it was a part of land now claimed adversely by him, his possession would not extend beyond the fenced part, and was not available to sustain an adverse claim to other land.—Kidd v. Bell (Ky.) 232.

§ 100. Certain acts by a grantee, improving land upon which he entered under a deed, held sufficient to support title by limitations to the entire tract, whether the deed is considered as a duly registered deed under the 5-year limitations, or as a written memorandum of title under the 10-year limitations.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 403.

§ 100. Adverse possession of land extends to the entire tract claimed, unless a part thereof is in the actual possession of another during some of the period of limitation.—Thacker v. Wilson (Tex. Civ. App.) 938.

(B) Title or Right Acquired.

§ 104. In trespass to try title, where defendants claimed that another by long silence as to his title to the land in controversy had abandoned claim thereto, and relied on that fact to raise a presumption of a transfer of his right to one under whom defendants claimed, testimony of such other's children as to declarations by him as to his ownership of the land was admissible to show that he had not abandoned his claim thereto.—Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Kimball (Tex.) 533.

III. PLEADING, EVIDENCE, TRIAL, AND REVIEW.

§ 111. Defendant held not entitled to claim by adverse possession in partition proceedings a two-acre tract which he had fenced where he did not describe such tract, in view of Civ. Code Prac. § 125.—Kidd v. Bell (Ky.) 232.

§ 115. Whether title to land by adverse possession is established is a question for the jury, where the evidence is conflicting as to the length and continuity of occupation, and the use and cultivation of the land.—Thacker v. Wilson (Tex. Civ. App.) 938.

§ 21. Consent of the parties cannot give the Supreme Court jurisdiction of the action, if it does not in fact have jurisdiction.—Schwychart v. Barrett (Mo.) 1049.

III. DECISIONS REVIEWABLE.

(D) Finality of Determination.

§ 69. An order refusing a writ of mandamus held interlocutory, and not appealable, in absence of statute.—Simmers v. Anderson (Tex. Civ. App.) 910.

§ 70. An order of revival under Kirby's Dig. §§ 6312, 6313, 6315, can be reviewed only on appeal from final judgment.—Blum v. Pulaski County (Ark.) 109.

§ 78. Rev. St. 1895, art. 1383, held not to authorize an appeal from an order of the county court setting aside a default judgment.—Hope v. Long (Tex. Civ. App.) 40.

§ 79. A judgment in a suit to sell land necessarily for a decedent's debts held a final appealable judgment as to a cross-petitioner, though his name was not mentioned therein.—Little v. Cardwell (Ky.) 799.

§ 80. An order, in proceedings by the true owner to recover possession of land and the rents thereof, brought against the occupant holding in good faith under a void judicial sale, held not appealable.—McDonald v. Rankin (Ark.) 88.

IV. RIGHT OF REVIEW.

(B) Estoppel, Waiver, or Agreements Affecting Right.

§ 154. Where the receiver of a bank in bankruptcy had appealed from a judgment against him for the value of certain notes, his claim on the notes against the estate of the president of the bank held not a recognition of the conclusiveness of the judgment so as to effect an abandonment of the appeal.—Morris v. Butler (Mo. App.) 377.

V. PRESENTATION AND RESERVATION IN LOWER COURT OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW.

(A) Issues and Questions in Lower Court.

§ 171. Where the action was necessarily based upon an adverse claim by defendants, plaintiffs held estopped from contending, on appeal, that the purchase of the land by defendant at foreclosure sale prima facie enured to plaintiffs' benefit as tenants in common with defendants, because the agreed statement of facts did not expressly negative such tenancy by asserting an adverse holding.—Rutter v. Carothers (Mo.) 1056.

§ 171. Where an action against a carrier was for negligent delay in transporting freight, the common-law liability of the carrier for delivery in a damaged state will not be considered on appeal.—A. C. L. Haase & Sons' Fish Co. v. Merchants' Despatch Transp. Co. (Mo. App.) 362.

§ 175. Where evidence merely raises an issue, and is not conclusive of it, a party relying on it, who fails to have it passed upon by the trial court, or at least to request that it be passed upon, waives the issue.—Bell County v. Felts (Tex. Civ. App.) 269.

not change a transfer of decedent's interest in the subject-matter may be first raised on appeal.—Wilson v. Darrow (Mo.) 1077.

§ 216. A party cannot complain that an instruction given is not sufficiently specific, unless he has requested one more specific.—Kirchman v. Tuffli Bros. Pig Iron & Coke Co. (Ark.) 239.

§ 216. Defendants held not entitled to claim for the first time on appeal that the submission of an issue concerning the reconveyance of certain land to the patentee was erroneous.—Saxton v. Corbett (Tex. Civ. App.) 75.

§ 219. Appellants cannot complain that findings do not cover all the issues of fact when no other findings were requested.—Capps v. City of Longview (Tex. Civ. App.) 427.

§ 219. Failure to find specified facts and propositions of law cannot be reviewed, where no request for such findings was made.—Gainesville Water Co. v. City of Gainesville (Tex. Civ. App.) 959.

§ 238. A defect in the verdict cannot be considered on appeal, where the defect was not presented at the trial by motion in arrest.—Southern Missouri & A. R. Co. v. Wyatt (Mo.) 683.

(C) Exceptions.

§ 263. Where no exception was saved at the time of giving plaintiff's instructions, error therein cannot be considered on appeal.—Kolokas v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1082.

§ 265. Failure to find specified facts and propositions of law cannot be reviewed, where no exception was taken to such failure.—Gainesville Water Co. v. City of Gainesville (Tex. Civ. App.) 959.

§ 270. Errors assigned to overruling motions in arrest and for a new trial cannot be considered on appeal, where no exception was saved to the ruling.—Kolokas v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1082.

(D) Motions for New Trial.

§ 281. An appeal from an order discharging an attachment upon denying plaintiff's motion to amend a defective affidavit held an appeal from an order denying an amendment, so that its denial cannot be reviewed in absence of a motion for new trial or for rehearing.—Marshall v. Brown (Mo. App.) 790.

§ 288. Where remarks of the judge made during the trial in the nature of comments on the evidence and mild criticisms of counsel were not assigned as grounds for new trial so that the court could correct itself, they will not be reviewed.—Gardner v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1068.

§ 289. Where a court's rulings excluding various offers of testimony were not assigned as grounds for new trial, so that the court could correct itself, they will not be reviewed.—Gardner v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1068.

§ 301. A question not assigned in the motion for a new trial or in the regular assignments of error held not reviewable.—Halter v. Leonard (Mo.) 706.

§ 301. A point not saved in the motion for a new trial held not reviewable on appeal.—Martin v. Bennett (Mo. App.) 779.

§ 302. A motion for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence, raised the question whether the verdict was sustained by sufficient evidence.—Naylor v. McNair (Ark.) 662.

§ 302. A ground of motion for new trial held so general that the trial court's action cannot be reviewed.—American Credit-Indemnity Co. of New York v. National Clothing Co. (Ky.) 840.

VI. PARTIES.

§ 334. After the term at which the judgment was rendered, the trial court has no power to revive the cause on the death of a party pending his appeal, and authorize the new party to file a bill of exception.—Wilson v. Darrow (Mo.) 1077.

§ 334. Rev. St. 1899, § 858 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 806), does not authorize revivor in the Supreme Court in the name of a stranger, who has acquired interest of a deceased appellant.—Wilson v. Darrow (Mo.) 1077.

VII. REQUISITES AND PROCEEDINGS FOR TRANSFER OF CAUSE.

(A) Time of Taking Proceedings.

§ 338. Act May 5, 1909, fixing the time for suing out writs of error, does not apply to writs to review judgments rendered prior to its enactment.—State v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Ark.) 627.

(B) Petition or Prayer, Allowance, and Certificate or Affidavit.

On appeal from probate court, see Courts, § 202.

(C) Payment of Fees or Costs, and Bonds or Other Securities.

§ 387. Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1387, the appellate court held to acquire no jurisdiction where an appeal bond was not filed within 20 days after the adjournment of the term.—Simpson v. Baker (Tex. Civ. App.) 959.

§ 387. Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1387, held to fix the time within which a nonresident appellant must file the appeal bond.—Simpson v. Baker (Tex. Civ. App.) 959.

(D) Writ of Error, Citation, or Notice.

§ 407. Under Rev. St. 1895, arts. 1394, 1398, where a citation in error merely directed the officer to summon defendant, service thereof on defendant's attorney is insufficient.—Pratt v. Interstate Savings & Trust Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 281.

VIII. EFFECT OF TRANSFER OF CAUSE OR PROCEEDINGS THEREFOR.

In justice's court, see Justices of the Peace, § 162.

X. RECORD AND PROCEEDINGS NOT IN RECORD.

(A) Matters to be Shown by Record.

§ 497. Where the appeal record fails to show that a special charge complained of was given, the instruction will not be considered.—St. Louis, R. & M. Ry. Co. v. Yznaga (Tex. Civ. App.) 267.

§ 500. An assignment of error complaining of the refusal to give certain instructions will be overruled, where the record does not show that appellant requested the instructions indicated in the assignment.—Montgomery v. Amisler (Tex. Civ. App.) 307.

§ 501. Where the abstract of the bill of exceptions does not show any call for a motion to strike out part of the answer, and the bill shows no exceptions to the court's ruling sustaining the motion, error assigned by defendant cannot be considered on appeal, under Laws 1903, p. 105 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 815), relating to practice in the Supreme Court.—Kolokas v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1082.

§ 511. A bill of exceptions held not in the record, where the record proper did not show that it was filed in proper time, which appeared only from the bill itself.—Southern Missouri & A. R. Co. v. Wyatt (Mo.) 688.

(B) Scope and Contents of Record.

§ 523. Depositions of witnesses read at the trial held a part of the record on appeal.—Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. Louisville Cotton Oil Co. (Ky.) 852.

§ 523. The court on appeal held entitled to consider depositions as a part of the record, though they should not be embodied in the transcript made by the official stenographer under Ky. St. § 4639 (Russell's St. § 3110).—Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. Louisville Cotton Oil Co. (Ky.) 852.

§ 539. Counsel cannot by agreement obviate the requirements of the rules of the Supreme Court as to the contents of the record on appeal.—Hays v. Foos (Mo.) 1088.

(C) Necessity of Bill of Exceptions, Cause, or Statement of Facts.

§ 547. An assignment of error in the denial of a motion for judgment on the findings cannot be considered, where the record on appeal contains neither bill of exceptions nor order of court showing that the motion was made and overruled.—Stephenville Oil Mill v. McNeill (Tex. Civ. App.) 911.

§ 549. Necessity for bill of exceptions preserving objections to remarks of counsel, stated.—Mowry v. Norman (Mo.) 724.

§ 549. Where the statement of facts prepared by the trial judge shows the proceedings on the trial, etc., and is filed within the time allowed for filing bills of exceptions, held, that exceptions to the introduction of evidence so presented will be considered.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Couch (Tex. Civ. App.) 67.

§ 554. A judgment cannot be affirmed if the abstract shows error in the record proper.—Southern Missouri & A. R. Co. v. Wyatt (Mo.) 688.

§ 554. Where there is nothing for consideration on appeal but the record proper, and the petition states a good cause of action, and the judgment is in form, the judgment will be affirmed.—Kolokas v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1082.

(E) Abstracts of Record.

§ 580. A finding of the chancellor on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal, especially where the testimony on which it is based is not abstracted.—Davis & Rhea v. Spann (Ark.) 495.

§ 586. An appeal held to present nothing for review except the record proper because of defects in the abstract of the bill of exceptions.—Hays v. Foos (Mo.) 1038.

§ 586. An abstract of record must not be constructed by commingling record entries and record proper with matter of mere exception in an undistinguishable mass, so that the appellate court is put to sorting out exceptions from record entries and record proper.—Kolokas v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1082.

(I) Defects, Objections, Amendment, and Correction.

§ 635. An appeal will not be dismissed because the abstract fails to show the filing of a bill of exceptions.—Claver v. Woodmen of the World (Mo. App.) 334.

§ 635. The failure of the abstract to show the taking of an appeal justifies a dismissal.—Claver v. Woodmen of the World (Mo. App.) 334.

§ 635. A default judgment entered on a cross-plea against codefendants would not be sustained on writ of error, in the absence of a showing in the record of an appearance of the codefendants, or of service on them aside from recitals in the judgment.—Mayhew & Co. v. Harrell (Tex. Civ. App.) 957.

§ 659. Certiorari will not be granted to amplify the record in support of an issue raised for the first time on an application for rehearing.—Saxton v. Corbett (Tex. Civ. App.) 75.

(J) Conclusiveness and Effect, Impeaching and Contradicting.

§ 663. A certificate to a statement of facts held conclusive.—Thouren v. Skirvin (Tex. Civ. App.) 55.

§ 664. Where the abstract of the bill of exceptions shows no exception to the overruling of motions for a new trial and in arrest, it will be assumed that no exception was saved, though the abstract of the record entries and of the record proper shows such an exception.—Kolokas v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1062.

(K) Questions Presented for Review.

§ 672. Rev. St. 1895, art. 1014, construed as to the meaning of error "apparent" on the face of the record.—Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Kimball (Tex.) 533.

§ 697. A bill of exceptions is sufficient if it appears inferentially that all the evidence is brought up.—Walker v. Noll (Ark.) 488.

§ 697. Bill of exceptions held to sufficiently show that it contained all the testimony.—Walker v. Noll (Ark.) 488.

(L) Matters Not Apparent of Record.

§ 713. Matters of record proper have no place in the bill of exceptions.—Southern Missouri & A. R. Co. v. Wyatt (Mo.) 638.

XI. ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS.

§ 719. A question not assigned in the motion for a new trial or in the regular assignments of error held not reviewable.—Halter v. Leonard (Mo.) 706.

§ 719. Errors not apparent on the face of the record, and not assigned in the trial court for presentation to the Court of Civil Appeals, as required, cannot be considered by the Supreme Court.—Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Kimball (Tex.) 533.

§ 719. Matters held not to constitute fundamental error, which can be considered in the absence of assignments of error.—Hamilton v. Kegley (Tex. Civ. App.) 304.

§ 719. The overruling of demurrers will not be considered on appeal in absence of assignments of error not predicated thereon.—John M. Bonner Memorial Home v. Collin County Nat. Bank (Tex. Civ. App.) 430.

§ 724. An assignment of error in rendering judgment for appellees against appellants, under which various propositions were submitted complaining of the admission of evidence, etc., is too general to require consideration on appeal.—Stephenville Oil Mill v. McNeill (Tex. Civ. App.) 911.

§ 728. An assignment of error in admitting any and all evidence offered by plaintiff over objection is too general and indefinite to be considered on appeal.—W. T. Adams Mach. Co. v. Castleberry (Ark.) 908.

§ 728. An assignment of error held insufficient under Court of Civil Appeals Rules 25 and 26 (67 S. W. xv).—Estes v. Estes (Tex. Civ. App.) 304.

§ 730. Certain assignments of error held insufficient as too general and indefinite.—Estes v. Estes (Tex. Civ. App.) 304.

§ 731. An assignment of error held too general to require consideration on appeal.—Stacy v. Delery (Tex. Civ. App.) 300.

§ 731. An assignment of error held too general and indefinite under Court of Civil Appeals Rules 22-28 (67 S. W. xv).—Estes v. Estes (Tex. Civ. App.) 304.

§ 739. An assignment of error held not entitled to consideration because embracing two or more distinct and inconsistent propositions of law.—J. T. Stark Grain Co. v. Harry Bros. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 947.

§ 742. An assignment of error held insufficient.—Washam v. Harrison (Tex. Civ. App.) 52.

§ 742. In an action to set aside a deed for fraud, an assignment of error held not to raise the issue of plaintiff's ratification.—Koppe v. Koppe (Tex. Civ. App.) 68.

§ 742. Assignments of error followed by insufficient statements or by no statement need not be considered.—Estes v. Estes (Tex. Civ. App.) 304.

§ 742. Assignments complaining of several separate charges embracing propositions of law as one proposition are insufficient.—Estes v. Estes (Tex. Civ. App.) 304.

§ 742. Where propositions under assignments of error are not germane to the assignments, or are general and indefinite, failing to specify with certainty the particular error complained of, they are insufficient under Court of Civil Appeals Rules 30-32 (67 S. W. xvi), prescribing the form of such propositions.—Estes v. Estes (Tex. Civ. App.) 304.

§ 742. Alleged error in the refusal of an instruction will not be considered, where its contents are not shown and it is not copied or referred to in the statement following the assignment.—Montgomery v. Amsler (Tex. Civ. App.) 307.

§ 742. Assignments of error not followed by a proposition or statement from the record, as required by Rules 29-36 (67 S. W. xv, xvi), will not be considered.—Capps v. City of Longview (Tex. Civ. App.) 427.

§ 742. Assignments of error with their propositions, not followed by any statements sufficient to explain and support the propositions, as required by rule 31 for the Court of Civil Appeals (67 S. W. xvi), are not entitled to consideration.—Beaumont Traction Co. v. Happ (Tex. Civ. App.) 610.

§ 742. An assignment of error, in overruling appellants' motion on the findings of fact by the jury and court for a judgment pursuant to such findings, cannot be considered on appeal, where it was not followed by a statement from the record showing the ruling complained of, or what the findings were on which judgment was asked.—Stephenville Oil Mill v. McNeill (Tex. Civ. App.) 911.

XII. BRIEFS.

§ 755. Though justice was not done below, the Court of Civil Appeals cannot review errors, in absence of a proper brief presenting them; they not being fundamental.—Stephenville Oil Mill v. McNeill (Tex. Civ. App.) 911.

§ 759. An assignment of error stated in the brief held not a copy of the assignment below, as required by court rule, so that it could not be considered on appeal.—Stephenville Oil Mill v. McNeill (Tex. Civ. App.) 911.

§ 773. Where appellant fails to file briefs, and there is no fundamental error, the judgment will be affirmed.—Beck v. Hancock (Tex. Civ. App.) 419.

XIII. DISMISSAL, WITHDRAWAL, OR ABANDONMENT.

In election contest, see Elections, § 305.

§ 787. Where neither appellant nor any of the appellees filed a brief, the appeal will be dismissed.—Suderman-Dolson Co. v. Carson (Tex. Civ. App.) 401.

XV. HEARING AND REHEARING.

§ 832. A new issue cannot be introduced on a motion for rehearing.—Saxton v. Corbett (Tex. Civ. App.) 75.

XVI. REVIEW.

(A) Scope and Extent in General.

§ 842. An instruction in the nature of a direction to the jury to find for the plaintiff raises a question of law.—Shelton v. Cooksey (Mo. App.) 331.

§ 843. Whether a foreign acknowledgment of a deed was defective need not be determined on appeal, where any defect in the acknowledgment was cured by a subsequent statute.—Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Kimball (Tex.) 533.

§ 843. An academic question will not be considered on appeal.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Wynne (Tex. Civ. App.) 50.

§ 843. Where the contract in suit cannot be enforced because defendant's agent had no authority to make it, whether it should be deemed an option or not need not be determined.—McKay v. McKinnon (Tex. Civ. App.) 440.

§ 843. Upon deciding, in an action against an executor for services rendered testator, that plaintiff's claim need not, under the statute, be presented to the executor and rejected before suing thereon, the appellate court need not decide whether the claim presented and rejected should have been excluded as evidence on the ground of variance between it and the account declared on.—Wells v. Hobbs (Tex. Civ. App.) 451.

§ 852. Whether evidence sustains a finding that defendant waived performance by plaintiff of a condition precedent held not to be considered on appeal where plaintiff pleaded performance, not a waiver thereof.—Dolinski v. First Nat. Bank (Tex. Civ. App.) 276.

§ 854. The order granting a new trial will be sustained, if any good cause is made by the motion.—Hawman v. McLean (Mo. App.) 1094.

§ 854. In the absence of declarations of law given or asked on a trial by the court, it is immaterial, on review of a judgment correct on the merits, on what theory the action was tried.—Kimberlin v. Gordon (Mo. App.) 1144.

§ 854. To affirm a judgment, the Court of Civil Appeals is not bound by the reasons given by the trial court.—Bell County v. Felts (Tex. Civ. App.) 269.

§ 854. Where the court correctly found in favor of the successful party on either one of two grounds, the judgment will be sustained.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Fowler (Tex. Civ. App.) 593.

§ 856. Court of Civil Appeals held not limited in affirming judgment to grounds stated by trial court.—Bell County v. Felts (Tex. Civ. App.) 269.

(C) Parties Entitled to Allege Error.

§ 878. In trespass to try title, in which defendant brought in his vendor as a party, defendant, on the vendor's appeal, held not entitled to question the correctness of the judgment for plaintiff against him, but could, on cross-assignments of error, combat the vendor's appeal against him.—Schwartz v. Jones (Tex. Civ. App.) 956.

§ 882. Defendant, in a will contest, held estopped from objecting to an instruction as to the capacity of testator to make a will given at the instance of plaintiffs.—Mowry v. Norman (Mo.) 724.

§ 882. A party cannot complain of an instruction which is the same as one asked by him.—Rippeteo v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 314.

§ 882. A defendant voluntarily accepting a false issue tendered by his adversary held not entitled to complain after he is defeated on such issue.—Pratt v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 1125.

§ 882. In an action for negligent death, brought under Rev. St. 1899, § 2364, as amended by Laws 1905, p. 135 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1637) defendant held not entitled to complain that plaintiff was permitted to show the pecuniary value of the life of decedent.—Pratt v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 1125.

§ 882. Where plaintiff's requested charges placed the submission of the case upon the same basis upon which it was submitted by the court, plaintiff cannot on writ of error complain of the court's placing the decision of the case upon those issues.—Kettler Brass Mfg. Co. v. O'Neil (Tex. Civ. App.) 900.

(D) Amendments, Additional Proofs, and Trial of Cause Anew.

Appeal from justice's court, see Justices of the Peace, § 174.

(E) Presumptions.

§ 903. Though all presumptions are to be indulged in favor of the action of the trial court, the court on appeal cannot indulge in presumptions in the face of the record.—Goodloe v. Empson Packing Co. (Mo. App.) 771.

§ 907. In the absence of a statement of facts, a finding of the trial court that the report of the jury of view appointed to lay out a road was accepted will be presumed to be correct, though the fact is not shown by the record of the commissioners' court.—Cator v. Hays (Tex. Civ. App.) 953.

§ 909. In an action against a carrier for negligent delay in shipping cattle, it cannot be assumed on appeal, in the absence of evidence on the point, that he sold for the highest market price on the day of sale.—Dawson v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co. (Mo. App.) 335.

§ 928. In the absence of an abstract of the evidence, the court on appeal must presume that the instructions given were based on the evidence.—Smith v. Scott (Ark.) 501.

§ 928. The presumption is that the trial court fully and correctly instructed on the issue involved, in absence of a contrary showing.—McAbee v. Wiley (Ark.) 623.

§ 930. In the absence of an abstract setting forth the evidence, the court on appeal must assume that there was evidence sufficient to uphold the verdict rendered on correct instructions.—Smith v. Scott (Ark.) 501.

§ 931. While, in a trial before a jury, the subsequent admission of evidence theretofore ruled out would have done away with the exception taken, in a trial before the court without a jury it must be assumed, on appeal, that the court determined the case on the theory announced in ruling out the testimony.—Griswold v. Haas (Mo. App.) 781.

§ 931. Where the lower court in a nonjury trial makes its written conclusions of fact, in accordance with certain testimony, in the absence of a showing that such facts were not considered by it in the final determination of the case, an appeal must be disposed of upon the theory that they were so considered.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Vandiver (Tex. Civ. App.) 955.

§ 934. Where appellant does not abstract the testimony necessary to show that the judgment is erroneous, the Supreme Court will presume that the judgment is correct.—Davis & Rhea v. Spann (Ark.) 495.

§ 934. In the absence of a showing to the contrary, the court on appeal must presume that the judgment justified by the petition was proper.—Dersch v. Miller (Ky.) 177.

§ 935. Where a record on appeal does not contain the testimony upon which the trial court overruled a motion to vacate the judgment, made upon the ground that the case was tried on appeal from justice's court without notice that an appeal had been perfected and in absence of defendants, it cannot be said by the Supreme Court, that there was error in overruling the motion.—Smith Bros. v. Flanders (Tex. Civ. App.) 80.

§ 936. Under Rev. St. 1895, arts. 1436, 1438, held, that where the court ignores article 1436 in awarding costs, and does not state reasons on the record, it will be presumed on appeal that good reasons did not exist.—St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas v. King (Tex. Civ. App.) 925.

(F) Discretion of Lower Court.

§ 959. In a case wherein the court allowed an amended petition to be filed on the day of trial, held, that in matters of this kind the trial court had a large discretion not to be interfered with in the absence of a clear showing of prejudice, which was not apparent.—John Diebold & Sons v. Wollborn (Ky.) 212.

§ 959. Granting leave to amend during the trial is largely in the court's discretion, and its ruling will not be disturbed, unless the discretion is abused.—American Copying Co. v. Muleski (Mo. App.) 384.

§ 964. The action of the court in directing that an original cause of action and a cause of action presented by cross-petition shall be heard together held not to be disturbed unless in the exercise of a sound discretion separate trials should have been ordered.—Offutt & Blackburn v. Doyle (Ky.) 156.

§ 969. The trial court has much latitude in directing the conduct of the trial, and, when the whole record shows that he endeavored to fairly conduct the trial and keep counsel within proper bounds, his discretion will not be interfered with on appeal.—Steltemeier v. Barrett (Mo. App.) 1095.

§ 979. The court, on appeal from a judgment awarding a new trial on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence, will not interfere with the discretion of the trial judge unless the petition fails to state a cause of action, or plaintiff's proof is insufficient to raise an issue for the jury.—Snickles v. City of St. Joseph (Mo. App.) 1122.

(G) Questions of Fact, Verdicts, and Findings.

§ 987. In proceedings for assignment of dower, held that, upon the record, the evidence should be reviewed by the Supreme Court.—Johnson v. Johnson (Ark.) 656.

§ 987. The court on appeal, must examine the evidence and ascertain whether it is sufficient to justify the findings made and the conclusions of law based thereon.—Parker v. Cook (Tex. Civ. App.) 419.

§ 987. Where the evidence is conflicting, the Court of Civil Appeals will find the facts in support of the verdict.—Beaumont Traction Co. v. Happ (Tex. Civ. App.) 610.

§ 994. The weight to be given to testimony of witnesses is a matter for the exclusive determination of the jury in the trial court.—Reis v. Epperson (Mo. App.) 353.

§ 994. The credibility of the witnesses is a matter peculiarly within the province of the trial court and jury.—Steltemeier v. Barrett (Mo. App.) 1095.

§ 995. The weight of the evidence is a matter peculiarly within the province of the trial court and jury.—Steltemeier v. Barrett (Mo. App.) 1095.

§ 1001. The Supreme Court cannot disturb a verdict which has legal evidence to support it.—Qualls v. State (Ark.) 498.

§ 1002. A verdict on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed.—Broadway Coal Mining Co. v. Davis (Ky.) 228; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith (Ky.) 806; Heinz v. United Rys. Co. of St. Louis (Mo. App.) 346.

§ 1002. If there is any evidence in the record on appeal which, fairly construed, would support the verdict, it will not be set aside because it contained other testimony tending to support a contrary conclusion.—Buchanan v. Rollings (Tex. Civ. App.) 962.

§ 1003. Evidence held not to authorize the court on appeal setting aside the verdict as against the weight of evidence.—American Credit-Indemnity Co. of New York v. National Clothing Co. (Ky.) 840.

§ 1008. A finding of the trial court in an action at law must be treated as the verdict of a properly instructed jury.—Wright v. Schultz (Ky.) 138.

§ 1009. A finding of the chancellor on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed.—Ozark & C. C. Ry. Co. v. Ferguson (Ark.) 624.

§ 1009. The finding of a chancellor held not conclusive on appeal.—Carr v. Fair (Ark.) 659.

§ 1009. Where a chancery case reaches the Supreme Court, it must be decided on the competent evidence.—Latham v. First Nat. Bank (Ark.) 992.

§ 1009. A chancellor's finding of fact on conflicting evidence is conclusive on appeal.—Everman v. Everman (Ky.) 135.

§ 1010. The conclusion of the trial court on the facts, in an action on a special tax bill, is conclusive, where it is supported by substantial testimony.—Fruin v. Meredith (Mo. App.) 1107.

§ 1010. Findings of fact by the court supported by some evidence are conclusive on review.—Kimberlin v. Gordon (Mo. App.) 1144.

§ 1011. A finding by the court, based on a preponderance of evidence, will not be disturbed.—Kimberlin v. Gordon (Mo. App.) 1144.

§ 1012. While the Supreme Court can weigh the evidence in equity cases, where the evidence is mostly oral, it will defer largely to the judgment of the trial court upon questions of the weight and credibility of the testimony, and its findings will not be disturbed in absence of a showing of abuse of discretion.—Ancell v. Southern Illinois & M. Bridge Co. (Mo.) 709.

§ 1015. Where evidence was conflicting, the grant of a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of evidence will not be set aside.—Bartlett v. Helmbacher Forge & Rolling Mills Co. (Mo. App.) 351.

§ 1015. The court on appeal from a judgment awarding a new trial on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence will not weigh the evidence except to determine whether that most favorable to the cause of action asserted is substantial.—Snickles v. City of St. Joseph (Mo. App.) 1122.

(H) Harmless Error.

§ 1027. Where in libel, judgment for defendant establishing the truth as a defense, as authorized by Gen. Laws 1901, p. 30, c. 26, was the only correct judgment that could have been rendered, errors committed by the trial court were not reversible.—Wheless v. W. Y. Davis & Son (Tex. Civ. App.) 929.

§ 1033. A plaintiff in foreclosure who appeals from a judgment in his favor may not complain, where the deed and notes on which he sues are void for usury.—Ward v. Blythe (Ark.) 508.

§ 1033. An instruction, in a servant's injury action, held not as prejudicial to defendant as to plaintiff.—Broadway Coal Mining Co. v. Davis (Ky.) 228.

§ 1033. In trespass to try title, held, that defendant could not object to exclusion of certain evidence.—Ingalls v. Orange Lumber Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 53.

§ 1039. Where a party gets the full benefit of a defense pleaded by him, he cannot complain, on appeal, that the answer, pleading the defense, was not permitted to be filed.—Keeney v. Waters (Ky.) 837.

§ 1040. Where plaintiff was not entitled under any phase of the evidence to recover more than the amount awarded him, error in overruling an exception to a certain plea was harmless.—Montgomery v. Amsler (Tex. Civ. App.) 307.

§ 1048. The erroneous admission of an alleged ante mortem statement by decedent held prejudicial.—Murphy v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (Ark.) 636.

§ 1048. In an action for death of a switchman, erroneous admission of contradictory statements by plaintiff's witness held prejudicial.—Murphy v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (Ark.) 636.

§ 1048. The impeachment of a witness whose deposition has been excluded is harmless.—Lindsay v. Bates (Mo.) 682.

§ 1050. In an action to replevin property mortgaged to secure a note given by defendants for a store account, in which the defense was payment, error in admitting irrelevant testimony that, when witness went to plaintiff's store to settle an account, the bookkeeper said that the witness still owed another account, but afterwards admitted that it had been settled, held prejudicial.—McCown v. Wilson (Ark.) 478.

§ 1050. In an action for personal injuries, the error in admitting testimony of physicians as to the necessity of a change of scenery to divert the mind of the person injured held not prejudicial.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Sandlin (Tex. Civ. App.) 60.

§ 1050. The admission of evidence held harmless error.—Ellwood v. Stallcup (Tex. Civ. App.) 906.

§ 1050. In an employee's action for the difference between his original salary and the amount which the employer claimed was his salary after it had been reduced by a general reduction of wages, where plaintiff claimed that he had received no notice of such reduction, error in admitting testimony not within the issues that defendant would have lost money, if wages had not been reduced because not within the issues, held harmful to plaintiff.—Fennington v. Thompson Bros. Lumber Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 923.

§ 1051. Where the competent evidence authorized the trial court to direct a verdict as was done, the error in the admission and exclusion of other evidence was not prejudicial.—Bailey v. O'Neal (Ark.) 503.

§ 1051. Error in admitting evidence on the question of damages was harmless where the undisputed evidence fully sustained the verdict as to the damages awarded.—Kirby Lumber Co. v. C. B. Cummings & Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 273.

§ 1051. Admission of evidence on an admitted fact held harmless.—Goldman v. Hadley (Tex. Civ. App.) 282.

§ 1051. In an action by a land broker for commissions, error in the admission of certain evidence showing notice to plaintiff of defects in defendant's title held harmless; such notice appearing from other evidence.—Montgomery v. Amsler (Tex. Civ. App.) 307.

§ 1051. In trespass to try title, admission of immaterial and irrelevant testimony held not to have prejudiced plaintiff, especially where the judgment for defendant was supported by proper evidence.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 403.

§ 1051. Evidence of a surveyor that the south line of a survey was pointed out to him by two persons was not objectionable because there was no evidence that such persons knew where the line was on the ground.—Myers v. Moody (Tex. Civ. App.) 920.

§ 1051. In action for breach of contract admission of a certain evidence, if error, held harmless.—J. T. Stark Grain Co. v. Harry Bros. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 947.

§ 1052. The error in taking interrogatories propounded to a party, and not answered by him, as confessed, is cured where the party is permitted to testify as to the matters inquired about.—Clevenger v. Blount (Tex.) 529.

§ 1052. Where facts sufficient to support a judgment for defendant were conclusively shown in a trial by the court by proper evidence, so that no other judgment could have been rendered, any error in the admission of evidence was not reversible.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 403.

§ 1052. Where, under a contract as properly construed, plaintiff was not entitled to recover, error in the admission of testimony affecting such construction was harmless.—Smith v. Fears (Tex. Civ. App.) 433.

§ 1052. The error, if any, in the exclusion of evidence, is harmless, where the witness was afterward permitted to testify to substantially the same facts.—Williamson v. Chicago, R. I. & G. Ry. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 897.

§ 1052. An objection to the admission of evidence is unavailing, where another witness is permitted to give the same testimony without objection.—Myers v. Moody (Tex. Civ. App.) 920.

§ 1052. Error, if any, in admitting testimony objected to, held harmless where the witness was allowed to make substantially the same statement without objection.—J. T. Stark Grain Co. v. Harry Bros. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 947.

§ 1053. Where evidence erroneously admitted related to issues which were not submitted to the jury, the error was harmless.—Stephenville Oil Mill v. McNeill (Tex. Civ. App.) 911.

§ 1054. Where the question in issue was conclusively established by evidence not objected to, error in admitting evidence thereon held not reversible especially where the trial was by the court.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 403.

§ 1054. Erroneous admission of evidence is not ground for reversal, where the trial was before the court, and there was sufficient legal evidence to support the judgment.—Gainesville Water Co. v. City of Gainesville (Tex. Civ. App.) 959.

§ 1056. In an action by plaintiff to recover for injuries in a railroad wreck, the exclusion of the depositions of two physicians who assisted the principal physician in the examination, and treatment of plaintiff while in a hospital, held not sustainable on the ground that the evidence was immaterial.—Epstein v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (Mo. App.) 366.

§ 1060. Error, if any, in comment by defendant's counsel, held not prejudicial, where the jury could not have rendered any other verdict than one for defendant.—Kettler Brass Mfg. Co. v. O'Neil (Tex. Civ. App.) 900.

§ 1064. The objection to an instruction on punitive damages that the words "or may not" should have been inserted after the words "then you may" in the clause allowing an award of such damages is too technical for consideration.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith (Ky.) 806.

§ 1064. In trespass to try title, a charge, if erroneous, held harmless.—Ingalls v. Orange Lumber Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 53.

§ 1064. In an action to set aside a deed for fraud, an erroneous charge held prejudicial.—Koppe v. Koppe (Tex. Civ. App.) 68.

§ 1066. In a coal miner's action for injuries by a car breaking loose and running over him, error in an instruction in authorizing recovery if the accident was caused by the negligence of a fellow servant in chocking the car under the foreman's direction, irrespective of whether he was present, held not to have prejudiced defendant, in view of the evidence and issues.—Broadway Coal Mining Co. v. Davis (Ky.) 228.

§ 1068. Defendant was not prejudiced by an instruction authorizing exemplary damages, where none were allowed.—Marcum v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 1148.

§ 1068. In trespass for cutting timber, the refusal to charge that plaintiff was estopped held not prejudicial in view of the verdict.—Clevenger v. Blount (Tex.) 529.

§ 1068. Where the court assumed that defendant's title was sufficient to sustain the three year limitations and charged the statute, and the jury found that they had not held possession for three years, defendants held not injured by failure to charge the five and ten year limitations.—Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Kimball (Tex.) 533.

§ 1068. Any error in the submission of the case to the jury was harmless to plaintiff, where he recovered all he was entitled to under the undisputed evidence.—Montgomery v. Amsler (Tex. Civ. App.) 307.

§ 1071. The mere failure of the court trying a case without a jury to give specific declarations, the principle covered by which is embodied in declarations given, held not ground for reversal.—Fruin v. Meredith (Mo. App.) 1107.

§ 1071. Where title by limitations was complete in defendant's remote grantor, at the latter's death, it was immaterial, upon defendant's title by limitations, that a deed by a subsequent grantor was so defectively acknowledged on its face that it would not support title by limitations, and hence a finding that it was properly acknowledged was harmless.—Merriam v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 403.

(J) Decisions of Intermediate Courts.

§ 1082. An objection that the account, required by Rev. St. 1899, § 3852 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2135), was insufficient to give the court jurisdiction, held to come too late on appeal. It should have been taken previous to or during the trial.—Wegner v. Gray (Mo. App.) 755.

§ 1082. Objections to the instructions not made in the application for a writ of error to review the judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals affirming the judgment will not be considered.—Clevenger v. Blount (Tex.) 529.

(K) Subsequent Appeals.

In criminal prosecutions, see Criminal Law, § 1190.

§ 1099. In view of the expression of the court's opinion on appeal as to the conclusiveness of the evidence in favor of a defendant's adverse possession of land in litigation, and the fact that no evidence on a subsequent trial below authorizes a departure therefrom, held, that judgment should be for defendant, regardless of how disputed boundary lines should be run.—Martin v. Spurlock (Ky.) 125.

XVII. DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION OF CAUSE.

(B) Affirmance.

§ 1126. To entitle appellee to an affirmance for failure of appellant to prepare the cause for submission, he must prepare the case for submission in accordance with Court Rule 42 (67 S. W. xvii).—Suderman-Dolson Co. v. Carson (Tex. Civ. App.) 401.

§ 1140. An excessive verdict rendered after trial without error will be corrected by the court ordering a proper remittitur.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Marshall (Tex. Civ. App.) 946.

(C) Modification.

§ 1151. Where the court erroneously confined the jury to one element of damages and plaintiff did not complain thereof, the verdict excessive under the instructions will be reduced by the amount of the excess.—Freeman v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo. App.) 1.

(D) Reversal.

§ 1169. Where the verdict is general, and there were two theories presented on which the case was tried, an erroneous instruction on one theory will require a reversal of the case.—St. Louis, B. & M. Ry. Co. v. Yznaga (Tex. Civ. App.) 267.

§ 1171. A judgment for defendant held not to be reversed on appeal because plaintiff was entitled to nominal damages.—Stone v. Adams Express Co. (Ky.) 200.

§ 1171. Error in rendering judgment held infinitesimal, and not to authorize a reversal.—Rector v. Rector (Ky.) 518.

§ 1171. A judgment will not be reversed where the only error was the award of a trivial amount of costs.—City of Columbus v. Bank of Columbus (Ky.) 835.

§ 1175. Where the evidence on appeal, which consisted of the pleadings and admissions therein, shows that plaintiff was entitled to a larger judgment than that rendered, the Court of Civil Appeals will reverse and render such judgment as the trial court should have rendered.—Blackwell Durham Tobacco Co. v. Jacobs (Tex. Civ. App.) 68.

§ 1176. Where a decree of the trial court involving title to land is reversed, the Supreme Court must remand the case to the trial court, with directions to enter a decree in accordance with the order and opinion of the Supreme Court.—McDonald v. Rankin (Ark.) 88.

(F) Mandate and Proceedings in Lower Court.

§ 1195. Where, in a proceeding to condemn a crossing over a railroad right of way, the Court of Appeals determined that on a retrial only one instruction as to the measure of damages should be given, such determination constituted the law of the case.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 849.

§ 1195. An instruction at a trial which was held on appeal to be error was properly refused on a subsequent trial of the case.—Mowry v. Norman (Mo.) 724.

§ 1201. The court on appeal vacating an injunction restraining a judgment creditor of plaintiff's grantor from selling under execution realty held by plaintiff will permit plaintiff after remand to amend the petition and make a case within Rev. St. 1895, art. 2989, amended by Gen. Laws 1909, p. 354, c. 34, § 1, passed subsequent to the issuance of the injunction.—Latham Co., Bankers, v. Shelton (Tex. Civ. App.) 941.

XVIII. LIABILITIES ON BONDS AND UNDERTAKINGS.

§ 1232. A judgment affirmed on appeal held to be within the covenant of sureties on an appeal bond.—Cook v. Spence (Mo. App.) 340.

APPEARANCE.

(A) Property, Estates, and Rights Assignable.

§ 19. Rights growing out of contracts which involve relations of personal confidence cannot be transferred by one party without the consent of the other.—Smith v. Pitts (Tex. Civ. App.) 46.

§ 19. A contract between a purchaser in a contract of sale of real estate and a third person held a personal contract, whereby the purchaser undertook to perform specified things which he could not shift to others without the consent of the third person.—Smith v. Pitts (Tex. Civ. App.) 46.

IV. ACTIONS.

Right of assignee to intervene in action involving assigned claim, see Parties, § 40.

ASSIGNMENTS FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS.

See Bankruptcy, §§ 140, 326.

II. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION IN GENERAL.

§ 178. Since under Ky. St. § 84 (Russell's St. § 396), fraudulent transfer of property void as to transferee's creditors would be void as to his assignee for creditors, the fact that a pledge of property by an assignor without delivering possession was good between it and the pledgees would not prevent the assignee from setting it aside as against the assignor's creditors.—Burnes v. Daviess County Bank & Trust Co.'s Assignee (Ky.) 182; Franke v. Same, Id.

VII. ACCOUNTING, SETTLEMENT, AND DISCHARGE OF ASSIGNEE.

§ 399. Where the effect of the lower court's holding was to sustain a demurrer to the exceptions to the assignee's report denying appellant a lien on the mortgaged property, on appeal, the allegations of the exceptions must be taken to be true.—Perkins & Manning Co. v. Drew & Landrum's Assignee (Ky.) 523.

II. RETAINER AND AUTHORITY.

§ 101. An attorney in a divorce action is without authority to compromise by accepting a less amount of alimony than awarded by the decree in satisfaction thereof without express authority of his client, and such a compromise is voidable at the client's option.—Sebastian v. Rose (Ky.) 120.

§ 103. Where an attorney compromised a suit without authority by accepting a less amount of alimony than awarded his client, the client, upon learning thereof, must either ratify or disaffirm it, and, on disaffirming, must occupy the same position as before the compromise.—Sebastian v. Rose (Ky.) 120.

BAIL.

II. IN CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS.

Authority of Supreme Court to grant on certiorari to review denial by trial court, see Courts, § 207.

False statement in justification as surety as perjury, see Perjury, § 6.

§ 44. Under Cr. Code Prac. § 75, the trial court could not admit an accused to bail after conviction, and before the mandate reversing the judgment was filed below, so that a bail bond given on its attempt to do so was void.—Howerton v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 173.

§ 45. Where a judgment of conviction was reversed by the Supreme Court on September 29th, the judgment was not vacated until the decision on appeal became final, when the mandate was lodged in the trial court on November 5th, pursuant to Cr. Code Prac. § 360, as amended by Act March 21, 1904 (Acts 1904, p. 144, c. 64), providing that no mandate shall issue or decision become final until after 30 days, excluding Sundays, from the day the decision was rendered.—Howerton v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 173.

§ 49. When an order denying bail in a capital case, under the constitutional provision making all persons bailable before conviction, with specified exceptions, should be affirmed on review by the Supreme Court, stated.—Carr v. State (Ark.) 631.

§ 77. Under Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 480, a return of service of citation in proceedings to forfeit a bail bond held not sufficient to sustain a default judgment against the surety thereon.—Couch v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 24.

§ 80. Under Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 479, subd. 4, held, it is enough that in scire facias on a forfeited bail bond the writ describe the offense as "swindling," without reciting whether it is a felony or misdemeanor (Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 309, subd. 3, as amended in 1899 [Laws 1899, p. 111, c. 74]).—Callaghan v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 879.

§ 93. Misrecitals in the judgment in scire facias on a forfeited bail bond held surplusage and immaterial.—Callaghan v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 879.

III. ASSIGNMENT, ADMINISTRATION, AND DISTRIBUTION OF BANKRUPT'S ESTATE.

(B) Assignment, and Title, Rights, and Remedies of Trustee in General.

§ 140. A trustee in bankruptcy may recover funds deposited in a bank by the bankrupt for the benefit of all the creditors, pursuant to an agreement between the creditors, including the bank.—Wagner v. Citizens' Bank & Trust Co. (Tenn.) 245.

(F) Claims Against and Distribution of Estate.

§ 326. Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 68a, 30 Stat. 565 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3450), held not to enlarge the doctrine of set-off.—Wagner v. Citizens' Bank & Trust Co. (Tenn.) 245.

BANKS AND BANKING.

II. BANKING CORPORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS.

(D) Officers and Agents.

§ 54. Failure of directors of a bank to perform the supervisory duties required of them by Kirby's Dig. §§ 841, 863, 864, held to render them personally liable to the creditors of the bank for debts incurred during the period.—Bailey v. O'Neal (Ark.) 503.

III. FUNCTIONS AND DEALINGS.

(C) Deposits.

Right of trustee in bankruptcy to recover deposit by bankrupt for benefit of creditors, see Bankruptcy, § 140.

§ 134. A bank, dealing with a depositor as trustee, and recognizing funds standing in his name as trust funds, held not entitled to appropriate the same to the payment of an individual debt to it of the trustee.—Wagner v. Citizens' Bank & Trust Co. (Tenn.) 245.

§ 134. Deposits in a bank held a trust fund, precluding the right of set-off in the funds.—Wagner v. Citizens' Bank & Trust Co. (Tenn.) 245.

§ 136. The relation of a bank to its general depositor is that of debtor to the depositor, and the bank holds a lien on the general deposit to secure repayment of the depositor's indebtedness.—Wagner v. Citizens' Bank & Trust Co. (Tenn.) 245.

§ 136. A bank, dealing with a depositor as trustee, and recognizing funds standing in his name as trust funds, held not entitled to appropriate the same to the payment of an individual debt to it of the trustee.—Wagner v. Citizens' Bank & Trust Co. (Tenn.) 245.

§ 153. A bank does not have a lien on special deposits, or on money deposited for a specific purpose, as for collateral security, or for the payment of a particular debt.—Wagner v. Citizens' Bank & Trust Co. (Tenn.) 245.

(D) Collections.

§ 165. A bank receiving a draft for collection is not the owner of its proceeds, but they belong to the drawer, and they are subject to garnishment.—Hobart Nat. Bank v. Fordtran (Tex. Civ. App.) 413.

BASTARDS.

III. PROCEEDINGS UNDER BASTARDY LAWS.

§ 19. Proceedings to affiliate a bastard, and compel the reputed father to aid in its support, are of a civil, and not criminal, nature.—Qualls v. State (Ark.) 498.

§ 65. Under the statute making the mother of a bastard a competent witness in cases of bastardy, unless legally incompetent, and in the absence of any statute requiring the testimony of prosecutrix to be corroborated, the jury, in proceedings to affiliate a bastard, may find that defendant is the father of the child upon the sole testimony of the mother, provided they believe it credible.—Qualls v. State (Ark.) 498.

§ 65. In proceedings to affiliate a bastard, and compel the reputed father to aid in its support, evidence held to support a verdict finding defendant the father of the child.—Qualls v. State (Ark.) 498.

§ 70. Though 280 days is recognized as the usual period of gestation, yet, as the birth of a child is liable to be accelerated or delayed by circumstances, the length of the period is purely a matter of fact to be decided upon all the evidence, physical and moral, in each particular case.—Qualls v. State (Ark.) 498.

(B) Form and Contents of Promissory Notes and Duebills.

§ 34. An undated promissory note may be valid under either the law merchant or under Negotiable Instrument Law 1905, p. 243 (Ann. St. 1906, § 463-1).—Bank of Houston v. Day (Mo. App.) 756.

(C) Execution and Delivery.

§ 60. Under Negotiable Instrument Law 1905, pp. 244, 245, 246, 265, §§ 6, 12, 13, 17, 191 (Ann. St. 1906, §§ 463-8, 463-12, 463-13, 463-17, 463-191) the original holder of an undated accommodation note held without authority to postdate the note and bind the accommodation indorsers.—Bank of Houston v. Day (Mo. App.) 756.

§ 60. The right of the holder to fill in the blank date of a note determined.—Bank of Houston v. Day (Mo. App.) 756.

§ 63. Certain notes for money loaned held not to constitute contracts for the payment of money for want of delivery to the lender.—Morris v. Butler (Mo. App.) 377.

II. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

§ 120. A vendor's lien note held properly construed to impose a joint and several liability on the makers.—Dolinski v. First Nat. Bank (Tex. Civ. App.) 276.

IV. NEGOTIABILITY AND TRANSFER.

(A) Instruments Negotiable.

§ 162. Checks issued to employes payable in merchandise held not negotiable instruments, and mere possession by a third person raises no

(C) Transfer Without Indorsement.

§ 209. Holders of a negotiable note payable to order, and not indorsed, would hold it, under Laws 1905, p. 243, §§ 1, 30, 31 (Ann. St. 1906, §§ 463-1, 463-30, 463-31), with notice of whatever equities the maker might have.—Sublette v. Brewington (Mo. App.) 1150.

V. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES ON INDORSEMENT OR TRANSFER.

(D) Bona Fide Purchasers.

§ 340. Banks in buying drafts accepted by a corporation held not charged with notice of its want of power to make the acceptances.—Lake Charles Nat. Bank v. J. I. Campbell Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 601.

§ 368. A bona fide holder without notice of a note held entitled to enforce it notwithstanding the fact that the payee inserted an improper date therein.—Bank of Houston v. Day (Mo. App.) 756.

§ 368. A holder of a commercial paper in due course within Negotiable Instrument Law 1905, p. 245, § 13 (Ann. St. 1906, § 463-13), defined.—Bank of Houston v. Day (Mo. App.) 756.

§ 370. A failure of the consideration for drafts as between the drawer and drawee would not affect the right of a bona fide purchaser of the drafts for value before maturity, without notice thereof, to recover thereon against the drawee.—Smith Bros. v. Flanders (Tex. Civ. App.) 80.

§ 373. Where plaintiff was an innocent purchaser for value of drafts given by defendant in payment for goods sold through fraud, but obtained knowledge of the fraud and of defendant's refusal to pay for them before maturity, defendant could set up the fraud as a defense in an action thereon by plaintiff only as to such drafts as matured when plaintiff had in its possession funds of the drawer sufficient to pay them.—Johnson County Sav. Bank v. Renfro (Tex. Civ. App.) 37.

§ 373. Where the drawee when he paid drafts was not fully aware of the fraud inducing the sale of goods for which they were given, or, if so, was then trying to adjust his differences with the drawer, the payment by the drawee did not preclude him from urging the fraud as a defense against one holding the drafts at maturity, with knowledge of the fraud, acquired after transfer, who then had sufficient of the drawer's funds to pay them.—Johnson County Sav. Bank v. Renfro (Tex. Civ. App.) 37.

VIII. ACTIONS.

§ 443. That the payee of a promissory note was also one of the makers would not prevent his maintaining an action at law thereon.—O'Day v. Sanford (Mo. App.) 3.

§ 499. In an action on a note executed to a decedent in which defendant pleaded payment, the production by defendant of receipts for money advanced, signed by decedent, would not of itself throw the burden of proving nonpayment on plaintiff.—Steltemeier v. Barrett (Mo. App.) 1095.

§ 537. In an action on a note, evidence held sufficient to go to the jury on the question of payment.—Nail v. First Nat. Bank (Tex. Civ. App.) 268.

§ 538. In an action on a promissory note, requested instructions held erroneous as attempting to shift the burden of proof.—Steltemeier v. Barrett (Mo. App.) 1095.

§ 538. In an action on a note executed to a decedent in which defendant claimed payment and produced receipts, requested instructions by defendant as to the effect of the receipts as payment, etc., held misleading and properly refused.—Steltemeier v. Barrett (Mo. App.) 1095.

§ 538. In an administrator's action on a note, in which defendant pleaded payment and offered several receipts for money advanced by decedent, signed by him, requested instructions to find for defendant, without finding that the payments receipted for were made on account of the note, which was the question in controversy, were erroneous.—Steltemeier v. Barrett (Mo. App.) 1095.

I. DESCRIPTION.

§ 3. A marked line, referred to in a deed, being indisputably established, the other part of the description should be read to harmonize with it.—Bentley v. Napier (Ky.) 180.

§ 3. The name of a water course on which land is located, as a part of the description of its boundaries, is no more conclusive than any other part of the description.—Scott v. Alpine Coal Co. (Ky.) 202.

§ 3. The original surveyor's lines on the ground not referred to in his field notes cannot control calls in the patent of the survey.—Goldman v. Hadley (Tex. Civ. App.) 282.

§ 3. Statement as to controlling calls in patent.—Goldman v. Hadley (Tex. Civ. App.) 282.

§ 3. Where nothing appears on the face of grants or from testimony to indicate that any other course was observed in making the surveys than true north and south lines, and the adoption of magnetic lines would lead to results inconsistent with calls of one of the grants, the true north and south lines should control.—Barraera v. Guerra (Tex. Civ. App.) 902.

II. EVIDENCE, ASCERTAINMENT, AND ESTABLISHMENT.

§ 33. The burden is on plaintiff of showing the land in dispute to be a part of the tract owned by him as alleged, rather than a part of the tract owned by defendant.—Thacker v. Wilson (Tex. Civ. App.) 938.

§ 35. Reputation as to the location of lines and corners of a survey is admissible as evidence.—Scott v. Alpine Coal Co. (Ky.) 202.

§ 35. Testimony as to marks made on ground by the original surveyor held objectionable, where witness does not show how he knew they were so made.—Goldman v. Hadley (Tex. Civ. App.) 282.

§ 35. A witness held properly allowed to testify that a surveyor was with him when he found a marked boundary line concerning which he testified.—Myers v. Moody (Tex. Civ. App.) 920.

§ 35. In a boundary line dispute, a witness could state the fact of having run a line at a certain place and time, whether he knew where the original line was run or not.—Myers v. Moody (Tex. Civ. App.) 920.

§ 35. Evidence of reputation, so far as it definitely exists, is admissible to prove the location of private boundaries.—Thacker v. Wilson (Tex. Civ. App.) 938.

§ 37. Evidence held to show the location of a marked line, referred to in the description in a deed, was the line intended by the parties.—Bentley v. Napier (Ky.) 180.

§ 37. Evidence held to sustain a judgment establishing a boundary line between certain surveys.—Myers v. Moody (Tex. Civ. App.) 920.

§ 40. Evidence as to the boundary between tracts of land held to raise a question for the jury.—Thacker v. Wilson (Tex. Civ. App.) 938.

§ 46. An agreement between adjoining landowners fixing their boundary, executed either by a marked line or by actual possession, is notice to all the world of such boundary.—Walker v. Cornett (Ky.) 841.

§ 49. When the location of a line as actually made by the parties to a deed is established, this must control.—Bentley v. Napier (Ky.) 180.

§ 54. Effect stated, where there is a discrepancy between a tract of land as located and the description in a patent.—Scott v. Alpine Coal Co. (Ky.) 202.

BROKERS.

See Principal and Agent.

II. EMPLOYMENT AND AUTHORITY.

Implied authority to make sales on credit, see Principal and Agent, §§ 103, 155.

§ 7. Evidence held to show an employment of plaintiff as broker to sell defendant's land.—Montgomery v. Amsler (Tex. Civ. App.) 307.

§ 8. Evidence, in an action to recover part of a commission alleged to have been earned for assisting defendant in making a sale, held sufficient to sustain a verdict for plaintiff.—Handlan v. Miller (Mo. App.) 751.

§ 14. The word "amount" in a letter regarding the sale by plaintiff, a broker, of defendant's land, reading "$22,250 your commission $1,112.50, this amount will buy the place," held to refer to the total of the two sums.—Smith v. Fears (Tex. Civ. App.) 433.

III. DUTIES AND LIABILITIES TO PRINCIPAL.

§ 19. Where persons buy goods through brokers paying them a specified brokerage, any rebate to the brokers received from the other party should inure to the buyers.—Plotner & Stoddard v. Markham Warehouse & Elevator Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 443.

IV. COMPENSATION AND LIEN.

Inconsistent conduct ground for equitable estoppel affecting right, see Estoppel, § 63.

§ 44. Defendant held not entitled to withdraw authority to plaintiff, a broker, to sell land, after plaintiff had procured a purchaser.—Montgomery v. Amsler (Tex. Civ. App.) 307.

§ 55. The owner, in absence of contract to the contrary, may employ a number of agents to sell land, and the agent who is the procuring cause of the sale is entitled to the commissions.—Smith & Sholars v. Fowler (Tex. Civ. App.) 598.

§ 55. Appellants, real estate brokers, held the sole procuring cause of a sale, and entitled to commissions.—Smith & Sholars v. Fowler (Tex. Civ. App.) 598.

§ 56. A real estate broker held not the efficient agent in or the procuring cause of a contract for the sale of timber, and not entitled to a commission.—Goff v. Hurst (Ky.) 148.

§ 58. One held not estopped to assert, against a claim for commissions for buying coal lands, that one of the owners was an infant, and so was not bound by his contract of sale.—Mitchell v. Weddington (Ky.) 802.

§ 61. A broker knowing at the time he undertakes to sell land of defects in the title cannot hold the owner responsible for the failure of the sale of a portion of the land because of such defects.—Montgomery v. Amsler (Tex. Civ. App.) 307.

§ 63. On the wrongful refusal of defendants to complete a land sale made by plaintiff, a broker, in accordance with his contract, they became liable to him in the amount to which he would have been entitled under the contract had they ratified the sale.—Montgomery v. Amsler (Tex. Civ. App.) 307.

V. ACTIONS FOR COMPENSATION.

§ 85. In a broker's action for commissions, evidence that, to enable the purchasers to make the cash payment required, plaintiff agreed to lend them the amount of the commission claimed by him, held admissible on the issue whether plaintiff was a joint purchaser.—Smith v. Fears (Tex. Civ. App.) 433.

§ 86. Evidence held to sustain a finding by the jury that there was an agreement between the parties to divide commissions.—Handlan v. Miller (Mo. App.) 751.

§ 86. Evidence, in an action to recover part of a commission earned by a sale of property, held to sustain a finding by the jury that plaintiff acted in the particular transaction for himself.—Handlan v. Miller (Mo. App.) 751.

§ 87. Where a broker sued on his contract for commissions, his damages were limited to those he sustained by the breach of the contract, and he was not entitled to any part of the profits made by defendants on a subsequent sale of the land.—Montgomery v. Amsler (Tex. Civ. App.) 307.

§ 88. In an action by a land broker for commissions, evidence held to warrant submitting to the jury the question whether plaintiff was a joint purchaser.—Smith v. Fears (Tex. Civ. App.) 433.

CARRIERS.

Judicial notice that railroads are engaged in interstate and intrastate commerce, see Evidence, § 20.

I. CONTROL AND REGULATION OF COMMON CARRIERS.

(A) In General.

§ 4. A coal company constructing a switch to its mine under Ky. St. 1909, § 815 (Russell's St. § 5352), held not a common carrier in violation of Const. § 210.—Straight Creek Coal Mining Co. v. Straight Creek Coal & Coke Co. (Ky.) 842.

II. CARRIAGE OF GOODS.

(D) Transportation and Delivery by Carrier.

§ 84. The duty of a carrier accepting freight for transportation does not end by merely carrying the goods in its cars to the point of destination, but it must deliver them at such place in or about its station as will enable consignee to conveniently get them.—Lewis v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 184.

§ 92. Gen. St. Kan. 1901, §§ 5278, 5282, place the defendant's property in custodia legis from the time of service of notice of attachment upon the garnishee, so that a railroad company ceased to hold defendant's property as a carrier after service of notice upon it in garnishment proceedings.—Letts-Spencer Grocer Co. v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 10.

§ 93. A carrier, issuing a bill of lading in favor of the buyer of goods, held to act at its peril when, as carrier or warehouseman, it diverts the goods.—F. H. Smith Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Mo. App.) 342.

§ 94. Whether a buyer suing a carrier for nondelivery of goods had advanced money to the seller on account of the goods is a question of fact for the trial court to determine.—F. H. Smith Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Mo. App.) 342.

(E) Delay in Transportation or Delivery.

§ 98. A claim for loss of profits by being compelled to stop an electric plant, because the shaft used therein was broken en route and returned to the repair shop by the express company to be repaired before it was forwarded to the plant, held based upon the owner's being deprived of the use of the shaft, so that the cause of the delay was immaterial.—Stone v. Adams Express Co. (Ky.) 200.

§ 99. A statute held to exonerate the carrier garnisheed in an action against the shipper or the consignee from liability for delay caused by the garnishment.—A. L. Haase & Sons Fish Co. v. Merchants' Despatch Transp. Co. (Mo. App.) 362.

§ 104. One suing a carrier for negligent delay in transporting freight held not to make a prima facie case of negligence by certain proof.—A. C. L. Haase & Sons Fish Co. v. Merchants' Despatch Transp. Co. (Mo. App.) 362.

§ 104. In an action against a carrier for mental anguish caused by delay in transporting plaintiff's wife's body, certain evidence held inadmissible.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Vandiver (Tex. Civ. App.) 955.

§ 105. Certain facts held not to put an express company's agent upon notice as to the purpose of the machinery shipped for repairs so as to make the express company liable for special damages by loss of profits caused by being compelled to stop business.—Stone v. Adams Express Co. (Ky.) 200.

§ 105. Loss of profits in being prevented from running an electric plant while a shaft which was broken en route was being repaired held special damages, which could not be recovered unless the carrier had notice of the use for which the shaft was intended.—Stone v. Adams Express Co. (Ky.) 200.

§ 105. A notice held sufficient to charge a carrier with notice of special damages by loss of business in case a car of coke was not promptly delivered to the consignee.—Texarkana & Ft. S. Ry. Co. v. Neches Iron Works (Tex. Civ. App.) 64.

§ 105. In an action against a carrier for mental anguish caused by delay in not carrying plaintiff's wife's body on the train upon which plaintiff was carried, recovery could not be had for mental anguish sustained by plaintiff's daughter and sister-in-law as a result of the delay.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Vandiver (Tex. Civ. App.) 955.

(F) Loss of or Injury to Goods.

§ 108. A common carrier is an insurer of freight, and can only escape liability for loss or damage by showing it was caused by act of God, or the public enemy, or by inherent defects in the goods.—Lewis v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 184.

§ 108. The carrier is responsible for goods in its possession for transportation unless the loss is due to an act of God, the public enemy, an inherent defect, or negligence of the shipper.—Abbott Gin Co. v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 284.

§ 113. Where goods intended for immediate shipment are destroyed in the carrier's possession, the carrier is responsible unless the loss is due to an act of God, the public enemy, an inherent defect, or negligence of the shipper.—Abbott Gin Co. v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 284.

§ 113. Defendant railroad company held not liable as a carrier for the destruction of cotton seed in certain storage houses on its right of way, the seed not having been accepted for immediate shipment.—Abbott Gin Co. v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 284.

§ 114. A carrier held to be an insurer of the safety of goods wherever kept till consignee has reasonable time to remove them after their arrival.—Lewis v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 184.

§ 114. The period of reasonable time for the removal of goods begins when the consignee knows, or in the exercise of reasonable diligence should know, that they have arrived.—Lewis v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 184.

§ 119. The flood on May 30 and 31, 1903, at the junction of the Kaw and Missouri rivers, held an act of God, and a carrier was not liable for loss of freight in such flood.—Merritt Creamery Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 322.

§ 119. Though defendant railroad was negligent in not getting a car containing plaintiff's butter out of its yards before the destructive part of an unprecedented flood, it was not liable, unless warned of the approach, not merely of a rise in the river, but of the flood.—Merritt Creamery Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 322.

§ 134. In absence of proof that the carrier received the goods claimed to be lost and damaged, a judgment against him in an action for damages is not sustained by evidence.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Cumby Mercantile & Lumber Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 568.

§ 135. The measure of actual damages for injury to a shaft while being transported, by falling out of the car and breaking, was the difference between the value of the shaft before and after the damage to it.—Stone v. Adams Express Co. (Ky.) 200.

§ 136. Reasonable time for removal of goods by a consignee and reasonable diligence to inform himself of their arrival are in general questions for the jury.—Lewis v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 184.

(H) Limitation of Liability.

Authority of agent of owner of goods to contract for limitation of liability, see Principal and Agent, § 101.

§ 149½. In view of Const. § 196, forbidding a common carrier to contract for relief from its common-law liability, a common carrier cannot, by any stipulation in the contract or bill of lading, reduce its liability as an insurer of the safety of goods till the consignee has had a reasonable time after their arrival in which to remove them.—Lewis v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 184.

§ 156. A shipping contract construed, and held to release a claim of the shipper for damages for failure to furnish cars.—Freeman v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo. App.) 1.

§ 156. Certain proof held not to show a leakage within a bill of lading relieving a carrier from liability for damages caused by leakage.—A. C. L. Haase & Sons Fish Co. v. Merchants' Despatch Transp. Co. (Mo. App.) 362.

§ 163. A recital in a shipping contract held prima facie evidence that the rate named therein is a reduced rate, so that the shipper has the burden of proving the contrary.—Freeman v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo. App.) 1.

(I) Connecting Carriers.

Right of connecting carrier to recovery over against initial carrier for judgment wrongfully recovered against it by shipper, see Indemnity, § 13.

it.—A. C. L. Haase & Sons Fish Co. v. Merchants' Despatch Transp. Co. (Mo. App.) 362.
§ 177. A connecting carrier held not liable for damages occurring on the initial carrier's line, notwithstanding Rev. St. 1895, art. 331a.—Houston, E. & W. T. Ry. Co. v. Eastern Texas Ry. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 972.

(K) Discrimination and Overcharge.

§ 199. A coal company held not to discriminate in trackage rates over its switch.—Straight Creek Coal Mining Co. v. Straight Creek Coal & Coke Co. (Ky.) 842.

§ 199. A railroad held not to operate as part of its general system the switch track of a coal company, so as to be subject to a charge of discrimination, because of the coal company's trackage charges to others.—Straight Creek Coal Mining Co. v. Straight Creek Coal & Coke Co. (Ky.) 842.

§ 200. The trackage charges of a coal company, being such as were agreed on with the parties using its switch before it was constructed, may not be complained of by them as extortionate till it has been paid its outlay for construction.—Straight Creek Coal Mining Co. v. Straight Creek Coal & Coke Co. (Ky.) 842.

III. CARRIAGE OF LIVE STOCK.

Validity of judgment in justice's court in action for injuries, see Justices of the Peace, § 124.

§ 228. Proof of delay in the transportation of live stock, unaccompanied by proof that it was caused by negligence, does not prove the negligence of the carrier.—Clark v. St. Joseph & G. I. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 318.

§ 228. A shipper, suing a carrier for delay in transporting live stock, has the burden of proving that the delay was caused by the negligence of the carrier.—Clark v. St. Joseph & G. I. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 318.

§ 228. In an action against a carrier for negligent delay in shipping cattle, a recovery of damages for decline in the market price held not sustained by the evidence.—Dawson v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co. (Mo. App.) 335.

§ 228. In an action against a carrier for negligent delay in shipping cattle, an instruction relative to the measure of damages for loss occasioned by the stale appearance of the cattle held erroneous.—Dawson v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co. (Mo. App.) 335.

§ 229. A shipper of cattle is entitled to recover compensation for the actual loss he suffers on account of the negligent delay of the carrier, which loss may consist of depreciation in market value, of loss in weight, and of loss on account of the stale appearance of the animals.—Dawson v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co. (Mo. App.) 335.

IV. CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS.

(A) Relation Between Carrier and Passenger.

§ 244. One riding on the bumper of a crowded street car held to be a passenger.—Beaumont Traction Co. v. Happ (Tex. Civ. App.) 610.

(D) Personal Injuries.

Contradictory instructions in action for, see Trial, § 243.

Refreshing memory of witness in action for loss or injury to live stock shipment, see Witnesses, § 256.

§ 280. Degree of care that a street railway company should exercise towards passengers stated.—Gardner v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1068.

§ 280. A carrier held not liable for an injury to a stockman staying in the stock car instead of in the caboose.—Fusselman v. Wabash R. Co. (Mo. App.) 1137.

§ 282. The general duty of a carrier to run its train with care becomes a particular duty to no one until some person is in a position to complain.—Fusselman v. Wabash R. Co. (Mo. App.) 1137.

§ 282. A mother, who refuses to pay proper fare for her son and forcibly resists his eviction, forfeits her rights as a passenger and is only entitled to ordinary care by the carrier for her safety.—Williamson v. Chicago, R. I. & G. Ry. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 897.

§ 283. Where trainmen were attacked and the flagman in the performance of his duty while repelling the attack shot and injured an innocent passenger, the carrier was liable if the act was wrongful.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Gunterman (Ky.) 514.

§ 284. It is a carrier's duty to protect passengers from unruly persons.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Gunterman (Ky.) 514.

§ 287. Where an opening in a train at a crossing has been made for the passage of persons, the duty to give warning before closing the space is not satisfied by merely ringing the engine bell or sounding the whistle.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith (Ky.) 806.

§ 292. Liability of a street railway company for injuries to a passenger from negligent construction of support to a trolley wire stated.—Gardner v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1068.

§ 292. A street railway company held bound to exercise the same care as to equipment furnishing the motive power as it does in furnishing safe cars for passengers.—Gardner v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1068.

§ 293. Injury to a passenger while riding on the bumper of a crowded street car held to be the result of the company's negligence.—Beaumont Traction Co. v. Happ (Tex. Civ. App.) 610.

§ 297. A carrier operating its train at ordinary speed is not liable to a passenger thrown from the back platform, on which he was riding, while the train was on a curve.—Crawford v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 220.

§ 298. It is the duty of railroads to operate their passenger trains so as to avoid unnecessary lurches that may injure passengers.—Flucks v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 348.

§ 302. It is the duty of a carrier to protect its passengers while they are alighting and until they have a reasonable time to leave the platform.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Gunterman (Ky.) 514.

§ 303. The measure of carrier's duty to provide its passengers with means for alighting defined.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Dunbar (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

§ 304. A carrier must exercise ordinary care for the safety on its premises of a person going to a train to meet a friend.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith (Ky.) 806.

§ 304. A person going to a train to meet a passenger need not wait until the train actually arrives before going to the platform, in order to avail himself of the rule of law that requires a carrier to exercise ordinary care for his safety.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith (Ky.) 806.

§ 305. Where a conductor, hearing a disturbance in a car, quieted the passengers causing the trouble, his failure to eject them was not the proximate cause of injury to an innocent passenger from a renewal of the difficulty.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Gunterman (Ky.) 514.

§ 314. Complaint, in action by passenger for injuries, held not demurrable as raising an inference of contributory negligence.—Beaumont Traction Co. v. Happ (Tex. Civ. App.) 610.

§ 315. Where plaintiff alleged that he was injured on a south-bound car on the west side of a viaduct, he could not recover upon proof that he was injured on a north-bound car on the east side of the viaduct.—Gardner v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1068.

§ 316. In a personal injury action against a carrier where the petition charges negligence specifically, the burden is on plaintiff to prove his case and continues with him throughout the trial.—Gardner v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1068.

§ 317. In an action for injuries to a street car passenger struck by a cross beam near the track on a curve, evidence that one track at that place was higher than the other causing a rapidly moving car passing the beam to lurch, throwing the car near to the beam, was admissible on the question of the company's negligence.—Gardner v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1068.

§ 317. A passenger injured by the upsetting of a step box may show that step boxes had upset on other occasions.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Dunbar (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

§ 318. Evidence, in an action for injuries at a crossing, held to show that plaintiff was injured by defendant's reckless disregard of its duty to him.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith (Ky.) 806.

§ 319. Street car men held guilty of gross negligence authorizing the award of punitive damages in an action for injuries to a passenger.—Lexington Ry. Co. v. Johnson (Ky.) 830.

§ 319. An award of punitive damages in an action against a street railroad held not excessive.—Lexington Ry. Co. v. Johnson (Ky.) 830.

§ 320. In an action for injuries to a passenger from a shot fired at a third person by the carrier's flagman, evidence held to warrant submission to the jury.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Gunterman (Ky.) 514.

§ 320. Whether the speed with which a train was run around a curve was dangerous and negligent is a question for the jury.—Flucks v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 348.

§ 320. Whether the prima facie case made by showing the derailment of a train and the consequent injury to a passenger was rebutted held under the evidence for the jury.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Sandlin (Tex. Civ. App.) 60.

§ 321. In an action by a passenger for injury from being shot, the evidence being conflicting, the jury should have been instructed to find for defendant if the shot was fired by a passenger.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Gunterman (Ky.) 514.

§ 321. In an action against a carrier for injury to a passenger from being shot by a trainman, instruction held erroneous.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Gunterman (Ky.) 514.

road company.—Lexington Ry. Co. v. Johnson (Ky.) 830.

§ 321. An instruction assuming that the operation of a train around a curve "at an unusually high rate of speed" was negligent held erroneous.—Flucks v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 348.

§ 321. A charge that a carrier was liable to a passenger injured in alighting, if its failure to provide a safe step box was the proximate cause of the injury, was not erroneous, though the use of the box on a rough pavement was alleged as the proximate cause.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Dunbar (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

§ 321. In an action by a passenger for the misconduct of the conductor, an instruction as to the duty of the carrier to furnish courteous employes held erroneous.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Marshall (Tex. Civ. App.) 946.

(E) Contributory Negligence of Person Injured.

§ 331. A passenger on a freight train did not assume the risk of any unusual and unnecessary jolting, resulting from the negligence of train operatives.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Campbell (Ky.) 848.

§ 331. A stockman who voluntarily placed himself in a place of danger held negligent, though he may not have anticipated danger.—Fusselman v. Wabash R. Co. (Mo. App.) 1137.

§ 336. Where a passenger was injured in a collision while riding on the bumper of a crowded street car, held, that he was not guilty of contributory negligence, and that his injury did not result from any risk assumed.—Beaumont Traction Co. v. Happ (Tex. Civ. App.) 610.

§ 337. Plaintiff held not guilty of such contributory negligence in crossing a railroad track as to prevent his recovery for injuries, under the laws in Alabama as to the effect of contributory negligence.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith (Ky.) 806.

§ 347. In an action by a street car passenger for injuries, evidence held sufficient to go to the jury on the question of contributory negligence.—Gardner v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1068.

§ 347. Act of a street car passenger in riding with a portion of his arm out of a window held not negligence per se, preventing a recovery.—Gardner v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1068.

§ 348. An instruction as to the duty of defendant, notwithstanding plaintiff's negligence, held proper.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith (Ky.) 806.

(F) Ejection of Passengers and Intruders.

Validity of law providing for arrest without warrant of disorderly person on train as authorizing unreasonable search or seizure, see Searches and Seizures, § 7.

§ 351. Ky. St. § 806 (Russell's St. § 5350), providing for the ejection of disorderly passengers from railroad trains, held valid.—Commonwealth v. Marcum (Ky.) 215.

§ 352. A brakeman on a freight train has no per se authority to eject a trespasser therefrom.—Marcum v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 1148.

§ 352. Custom, with knowledge of defendant's officers, for freight brakemen to eject trespassers, held sufficient to confer such authority notwithstanding the company's rules.—Marcum v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 1148.

by coal thrown by the brakeman after plaintiff had alighted.—Marcum v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 1148.

§ 382. In an action for ejection of a trespasser on a freight train, facts held to justify an instruction authorizing the allowance of exemplary damages.—Marcum v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 1148.

§ 382. Evidence held insufficient to authorize a verdict of $1,250 for the ejection of a female passenger from a train.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Hood (Tex. Civ. App.) 569.

§ 384. In a suit to recover for ejection of a passenger, held, that there was no material error in refusing a portion of a charge to the effect that she had no right to demand that the train be run back to the station to enable her to get a ticket.—*International & G. VI. OFFICERS AND AGENTS.

(D) Liability for Corporate Debts and Acts.

§ 349. Under Kirby's Dig. §§ 841, 848, 859, 862-864, the creditors of a corporation held entitled to sue the directors thereof, though the

VII. CORPORATE POWERS AND LIABILITIES.

(A) Extent and Exercise of Powers in General.

§ 388. If a sale of a minor's land to a corporation upon petition by the guardian was otherwise valid, and the minors have received the consideration of the sale, they cannot assert want of power in the corporation to take and hold the land as a ground for vacating the sale.—Ancell v. Southern Illinois & M. Bridge Co. (Mo.) 709.

(B) Representation of Corporation by Officers and Agents.

§ 433. In an action for injury to plaintiff's wife from fright and humiliation caused by defendant's agents going upon plaintiff's premises in the nighttime, where the evidence showed that defendant's agents were guilty of trespass, held, that whether defendant's agents were acting within the line of their duty should have been submitted to the jury.—Alexander v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 572.

(C) Property and Conveyances.

§ 439. Purchaser of assets of a corporation sold for value and in good faith held to take them discharged of any trust in favor of the creditors of the selling corporation.—Warren v. Mayer Fertilizer & Junk Co. (Mo. App.) 1087.

§ 445. In an equitable action by a creditor of a corporation, which had transferred its assets to another corporation, to subject the conveyed assets to satisfaction of his debt, held, that he could not assert a right based upon a naked legal obligation as against equities of defendant.—Warren v. Mayer Fertilizer & Junk Co. (Mo. App.) 1087.

(E) Torts.

§ 493. A corporation is liable for an assault authorized by it.—Medlin Milling Co. v. Boutwell (Tex. Civ. App.) 442.

(F) Civil Actions.

Evidence of self-serving declarations, see Evidence, § 271.

Hearsay evidence, see Evidence, § 317.

§ 499. Where, at the time a corporation was sued, it had not failed to pay its franchise tax, a condition precedent to its right to do business in the state, it would not be deprived of the right to defend the action by afterwards failing to pay such tax.—J. T. Stark Grain Co. v. Harry Bros. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 947.

VIII. INSOLVENCY AND RECEIVERS.

§ 542. Evidence held to show that a corporation transferring its assets to another corporation did so in good faith and for an adequate consideration.—Warren v. Mayer Fertilizer & Junk Co. (Mo. App.) 1087.

§ 547. Fact that the claim of a creditor of a corporation was pending in the Supreme Court when the corporation transferred its assets to another company would not prevent the claim from being a lien on the assets, if the conveyance was not in good faith and for adequate consideration.—Warren v. Mayer Fertilizer & Junk Co. (Mo. App.) 1087.

§ 565. As a condition to participation in assets of a receivership, held a creditor who has obtained assets of the insolvent corporation in receivership proceedings in another state, into which all creditors were not allowed to participate, may be required to pay them into court.

I. NATURE, GROUNDS, AND EXTENT OF RIGHT IN GENERAL.

§ 51. Plaintiff, who was not entitled to maintain an action at the commencement thereof, and before filing an amended petition, is liable for costs accruing before such amendment.—City of Columbus v. Bank of Columbus (Ky.) 835.

V. AMOUNT, RATE, AND ITEMS.

§ 146. Under Rev. St. 1895, arts. 1421, 2491, defendant against whom costs have been adjudged is liable for only such amount of plaintiff's costs as plaintiff is primarily liable for.—Wichita Mill & Elevator Co. v. State (Tex. Civ. App.) 427.

VII. ON APPEAL OR ERROR, AND ON NEW TRIAL OR MOTION THEREFOR.

§ 238. The costs of an appeal, unnecessarily taken after the subject-matter of the litigation had been finally settled by another tribunal, should be taxed against appellants.—Young v. Boles (Ark.) 496.

§ 241. In trespass to try title, in which defendant brought in as a party his vendor, and sought to recover on his warranty, the question of costs determined.—Schwartz v. Jones (Tex. Civ. App.) 956.

Mandamus, see Mandamus, §§ 79, 167, 176, 178.

Parol or extrinsic evidence of orders, see Evidence, §§ 387, 433.

§ 42. Neither a county judge nor his son can act as members of the fiscal court in fixing the salary of the county judge.—Grayson County v. Rogers (Ky.) 866.

§ 46. As the county judge cannot also hold the office of supervisor of roads, the fiscal court has no authority to make such judge an extra allowance of salary as such supervisor.—Grayson County v. Rogers (Ky.) 866.

§ 53. A mistake in the entry of an order of the fiscal court may be corrected by that court summarily during the term at which it was made, or after the term, on reasonable notice to persons affected.—Grayson County v. Rogers (Ky.) 866.

§ 57. Under Ky. St. §§ 1835, 1842, 1843 (Russell's St. §§ 2971, 2976, 2977), an alleged error in an order of the fiscal court fixing the salary of the county judge cannot be shown in a collateral action.—Grayson County v. Rogers (Ky.) 866.

(D) Officers and Agents.

§ 64. An order of the fiscal court appointing one of its members a commissioner to build a bridge was void.—Milliken v. George L. Gillum & Son (Ky.) 151.

§ 85. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 10194 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4629), a report of a county surveyor made in his name by his deputy held valid.—Halter v. Leonard (Mo.) 706.

III. PROPERTY, CONTRACTS, AND LIABILITIES.

(B) Contracts.

Sale of school lands, see Public Lands, § 173.

IV. FISCAL MANAGEMENT, PUBLIC DEBT, SECURITIES, AND TAXATION.

§ 155. The fiscal court held without power to order the county treasurer to pay the county's money into the hands of a third person, to be later paid out by him, to satisfy a county indebtedness created by him.—Milliken v. George L. Gillum & Son (Ky.) 151.

§ 167. A county held liable in equity for money furnished on void warrants for the construction of a bridge; the bridge having been accepted by the fiscal court, and in use by the public since its completion.—Milliken v. George L. Gillum & Son (Ky.) 151.

§ 167. A bridge commissioner held liable for the difference between what plaintiffs paid him for void warrants of the fiscal court for building a bridge and the amount recovered from the county.—Milliken v. George L. Gillum & Son (Ky.) 151.

V. CLAIMS AGAINST COUNTY.

§ 204. An order of the fiscal court allowing a claim for building a bridge held void for indefiniteness.—Milliken v. George L. Gillum & Son (Ky.) 151.

Trial by court without jury, see Trial, §§ 388-396.

I. NATURE, EXTENT, AND EXERCISE OF JURISDICTION IN GENERAL.

§ 1. Jurisdiction is the right to hear and determine.—Staples v. Shiver (Ky.) 828.

§ 7. An action for tort to the person held transitory, so that the courts of one state may acquire jurisdiction of actions for torts based on acts or omissions done or occurring in sister states.—Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Street (Tex. Civ. App.) 270.

§ 7. The right of the courts of one state to take jurisdiction of causes of action for torts to persons based on acts or omissions done or occurring in sister states held not affected by the fact that there is a dissimilarity between the laws of the two states as applicable to the action.—Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Street (Tex. Civ. App.) 270.

§ 17. A court of general jurisdiction is possessed of jurisdiction of the subject-matter if it has jurisdiction to hear and determine causes of the general class of the one under consideration.—Cook v. Spence (Mo. App.) 340.

II. ESTABLISHMENT, ORGANIZATION, AND PROCEDURE IN GENERAL.(A) Creation and Constitution, and Court Officers.

§ 48. While a seal is not necessary to a court of record, the term "court of record" implies that it has a seal.—Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Kimball (Tex.) 533.

(C) Rules of Court and Conduct of Business.

§ 85. The rules of practice of the Supreme Court apply to all persons, cases, and representatives of clients alike, and must be construed in one case just as they have been or will be in another, irrespective of the case, the parties, or their counsel.—Kolokas v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1082.

(D) Rules of Decision, Adjudications, Opinions, and Records.

§ 89. Where ruling precedents as to the construction of a statute are long and definitely settled, and the business of the state has become adapted to it, the construction will not be departed from.—Commonwealth v. Louisville Gas Co. (Ky.) 164.

§ 90. The appellate court should be controlled by previous adjudications of the court on the same question.—Schwalk's Adm'r v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 800.

§ 91. The Court of Appeals is bound by a decision of the Supreme Court in a case where the question decided was in issue.—O'Day v. Sanford (Mo. App.) 3.

§ 91. The Court of Appeals must follow the decisions of the Supreme Court.—Martin v. Bennett (Mo. App.) 779.

§ 91. It is the duty of the Court of Civil Appeals to follow rulings of the Supreme Court, though it might have reached a different conclusion had the question been presented as an original proposition.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Graves (Tex. Civ. App.) 458.

§ 95. The right of recovery for injuries at a railroad crossing in another state is, in the absence of a statutory provision, to be determined by the laws of that state as declared by its Supreme Court.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith (Ky.) 806.

§ 116. A court may amend its record by a nunc pro tunc order so as to make it speak the truth, but not to make it speak what it ought to have spoken.—Bouldin v. Jennings (Ark.) 639.

III. COURTS OF GENERAL ORIGINAL JURISDICTION.(B) Courts of Particular States.

§ 124. Where the issue was involved whether the amount paid by plaintiff was a lien on a lot when it was conveyed to him by defendant, the circuit court had jurisdiction of the case, though the amount involved was less than $100.—Naylor v. McNair (Ark.) 662.

§ 154. The circuit court has jurisdiction of the trial of a contest over the offices of mayor and alderman; no tribunal being provided for the induction of these officers.—Adcock v. Houk (Tenn.) 979.

V. COURTS OF PROBATE JURISDICTION.

§ 202. An alleged affidavit for an appeal held not properly sworn to.—Walker v. Noll (Ark.) 488.

§ 202. A motion to dismiss an appeal from the probate to the circuit court held a direct attack on the order granting the appeal.—Walker v. Noll (Ark.) 488.

§ 202. An appeal from the probate to the circuit court held not properly taken for want of presentation of a proper affidavit, action thereon, and an order granting the appeal, as required by Kirby's Dig. § 1348.—Walker v. Noll (Ark.) 488.

VI. COURTS OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION.(A) Grounds of Jurisdiction in General.

§ 207. Const. art. 7, § 4. held not to authorize a judge of the Supreme Court to issue certiorari to review an order of the trial court denying bail, so that the order of such judge granting bail was unauthorized.—Carr v. State (Ark.) 631.

(B) Courts of Particular States.

§ 223. The Court of Appeals has jurisdiction on appeal from a judgment denying relief in a suit to enjoin the enforcement of a void judgment for less than $200.—Staples v. Shiver (Ky.) 826.

§ 231. An appeal in a railroad condemnation proceeding should be taken direct to the Supreme Court as involving title to realty.—Southern Missouri & A. R. Co. v. Wyatt (Mo.) 688.

§ 231. That the trial court misconstrued the act of Congress for the removal of causes (Act

March 3, 1875, c. 137, § 2, 18 Stat. 470 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 509]], or erroneously decided that a defendant was not entitled to remove the case under the facts presented in the petition, would not draw into question the validity of the act of Congress, within Const. art. 6, § 12, so as to give the Supreme Court jurisdiction of the appeal from its decision.—Schwyhart v. Barrett (Mo.) 1049.

§ 231. Under Act June 12, 1909 (Acts 1909, p. 397), giving the Courts of Appeals jurisdiction of cases where the amount in dispute does not exceed $7,500, construed in view of other provisions, held, that the "amount in dispute" should be determined as of the date the judgment was rendered, so that where the amount of a judgment appealed from was $7,500, interest up to the passage of the act could not be added to enable the Supreme Court to retain jurisdiction of the appeal.—Schwyhart v. Barrett (Mo.) 1049.

§ 231. A suit to set aside a deed for fraud held to involve title to real estate, within the Constitution, defining the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.—Schroeder v. Turpin (Mo. App.) 1.

§ 231. Action held to involve title to real estate, and that an appeal therein to the Court of Appeals must be certified to the Supreme Court.—Long v. Green County Abstract & Loan Co. (Mo. App.) 3.

§ 246. Under Acts 1907, p. 233, c. 82, § 7, the Supreme Court held not to have jurisdiction of a suit to establish certain rights in a homestead, as a homestead cannot exceed $1,000 in value.—Bell v. Noe (Tenn.) 81.

VII. UNITED STATES COURTS.

(B) Jurisdiction Dependent on Nature of Subject-Matter.

§ 289. Where a railroad company, while operating its road in Missouri, violated a law of the state to the injury of a person therein, the fact that it was also engaged in interstate transportation was not material in determining state or federal jurisdiction.—Shohoney v. Quincy, O. & K. C. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1025.

(C) Jurisdiction Dependent on Citizenship, Residence, or Character of Parties.

§ 300. A federal court has no jurisdiction of a suit between two citizens of the same state on a cause of action arising within the state and under its laws.—Shohoney v. Quincy, O. & K. C. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1025.

COVENANTS.

In lease, construction, see Landlord and Tenant, § 44.

II. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

(B) Covenants of Title.

§ 42. A vendor, by conveying to a remote assignee of his purchaser with covenant to defend against claims and liens, held not bound to defend against liens created by intermediate parties interested.—Naylor v. McNair (Ark.) 662.

(C) Covenants as to Use of Real Property.

§ 51. Change in conditions held not to prevent enforcement of a building restriction, subject to which plaintiffs and defendants bought lots.—Spahr v. Cape (Mo. App.) 379.

(D) Covenants Running with the Land.

§ 70. An instrument granting permission to construct a drainage ditch through land held a mere license, revocable at the will of the licensor, and not a covenant running with the land.—Williams v. Beatty (Mo. App.) 323.

§ 74. A contract of warranty contained in a deed of real estate involves a personal obligation on the part of the grantor to which the grantee has a right, and which cannot be denied him or switched to another without his consent.—Smith v. Pitts (Tex. Civ. App.) 46.

§ 78. Plaintiffs who bought lots in an addition subject to a building restriction may enforce it against defendants who bought other lots subject to like restriction, though, after the sale to them, the platters of the addition abandoned the restriction scheme.—Spahr v. Cape (Mo. App.) 379.

III. PERFORMANCE OR BREACH.

§ 94. Where a vendor attempts to convey land with a covenant for fee-simple title when he has no legal title whatever, held, that the covenantee may sue on the covenant when he has suffered substantial damages, though there has been no eviction.—Pineland Mfg. Co. v. Guardian Trust Co. (Mo. App.) 1133.

§ 96. The existence of a street assessment lien which is valid against property at the time the owner deeds it, by statutory warranty deed, to one having no notice of the lien, is a breach of covenant of title.—Reis v. Epperson (Mo. App.) 353.

§ 100. A covenant of title of a grantor, conveying land owned in part by another, and while the latter's title to the other part was maturing by adverse possession, held only breached as to the extent the latter then owned the land.—Schwartz v. Jones (Tex. Civ. App.) 950.

IV. ACTIONS FOR BREACH.

§ 116. In an action for breach of covenant of title, in that there were assessment liens against the property, defendant held to have admitted by his answer that there was proper service of notice of the assessment on himself, and hence a judgment declaring the assessment a lien was properly admitted in evidence.—Reis v. Epperson (Mo. App.) 353.

§ 118. In an action for breach of covenant of title, an instruction placing the burden of proof of certain matters on plaintiff held erroneous.—Reis v. Epperson (Mo. App.) 353.

§ 132. Necessary proceedings of a covenantee, after default of covenantor to furnish title which it covenanted to convey, held substantial damage which can be recovered under the covenant.—Pineland Mfg. Co. v. Guardian Trust Co. (Mo. App.) 1133.

§ 132. In an action for breach of a covenant to convey fee-simple title, attorney's fees and necessary reasonable expenses and proper court costs held allowable.—Pineland Mfg. Co. v. Guardian Trust Co. (Mo. App.) 1133.

§ 135. In an action for breach of covenant of title, instructions held to properly present issues to the jury.—Reis v. Epperson (Mo. App.) 353.

§ 478. A witness held competent to testify which one of the bullet wounds on the body of decedent was the place of entry.—Welch v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 880.

§ 494. Evidence as to handwriting held insufficient to support a conviction of forgery, under Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 794.—Brooks v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 386.

(J) Testimony of Accomplices and Codefendants.

§ 508. That an accomplice not jointly prosecuted with the defendant is a competent witness for the state is clearly settled under Rev. St. 1899, § 4680 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2549).—State v. Shelton (Mo.) 732.

§ 508. Any inducements held out to an accomplice and the fact that he admitted that he was an accomplice are questions which affect only his credibility and the weight of his testimony, which are matters for the jury's consideration, and do not affect his competency.—State v. Shelton (Mo.) 732.

(K) Confessions.

§ 519. If there is no improper conduct of officers, or any flattery of hope, promise of immunity, or use of threats, to induce confessions, they are voluntary, and are admissible.—State v. Wilson (Mo.) 671.

§ 519. In a criminal case, evidence of a conversation between accused and officers who afterward had him arrested held admissible, though such officers testified that they would not have permitted accused to leave, had he attempted to do so.—Martin v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 538.

(M) Weight and Sufficiency.

In particular criminal prosecutions.

See Abduction, § 12; False Pretenses, § 49; Forgery, § 44; Gaming, § 98; Homicide, §§ 234-234; Larceny, §§ 55, 59; Rape, § 51; Robbery, § 24; Seduction, § 45.

For offenses against liquor laws, see Intoxicating Liquors, § 236.

For violation of election laws, see Elections, § 329.

§ 561. The guilt of accused must be established by evidence beyond a reasonable doubt.—Sprouse v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 134.

§ 564. Evidence held to show that accused unlawfully sold liquor in the county in which the indictment was found.—Matthews v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 544.

XI. TIME OF TRIAL AND CONTINUANCE.

§ 575. One convicted at a term of the county court fixed by commissioner's court, as authorized by Const. art. 5, § 29, cannot complain of the failure of the county court to hold a term every month for criminal business, as required by section 17.—Matthews v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 544.

§ 594. The denial of an application for a continuance for absence of a witness held erroneous.—Mason v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 871.

§ 595. In a prosecution for assault to murder, held error to deny a first application for a continuance to enable accused to procure absent witness.—Cameron v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 870.

§ 596. A continuance for absent testimony is properly refused, where such testimony could only be used to impeach a state's witness.—Gee v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 23.

§ 598. A motion for a continuance held insufficient.—McRae v. State (Ark.) 479.

§ 598. A sufficient excuse for want of diligence in obtaining testimony, for absence of which continuance is sought, held shown.—Richardson v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 560.

§ 599. In a prosecution for violating the local option law, held error to deny an application for continuance to enable accused to procure two witnesses who would deny the testimony of the state's witness.—Rankin v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 25.

§ 603. An application for a continuance for the want of certain witnesses, which did not set out what facts it was expected would be testified to by them, was properly refused.—Zachary v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 263.

§ 614. A continuance held erroneously refused.—Elkins v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 393.

XII. TRIAL.

In particular criminal prosecutions.

See Breach of the Peace, § 10; Burglary, § 46; False Pretenses, § 52; Homicide, §§ 295-310; Larceny, §§ 68-77; Perjury, § 37; Rape, § 59.

For offenses against liquor laws, see Intoxicating Liquors, § 239.

(A) Preliminary Proceedings.

§ 628. Accused held to be in no position to complain of indorsement of names of witnesses on the information after the case had been called for trial, where there was no suggestion of surprise or application for a continuance.—State v. Wilson (Mo.) 671.

(C) Reception of Evidence.

§ 666. The county attorney may put any witness on the stand he sees fit, and he need not call the prosecutor as a witness.—Evans v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 392.

§ 670. Where the court was not informed as to what a witness would testify to in response to a question objected to, there was no error in sustaining the objection.—Welch v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 880.

§ 673. In a prosecution for unlawfully carrying a weapon, a requested charge held erroneously refused.—Benjamin v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 542.

§ 678. In a prosecution for rape, the state may be required to elect on which of several instances of intercourse it will rely for a conviction.—Bader v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 555.

§ 681. The state held authorized to prove by a witness the position of the body of decedent, without first showing that it had not been disturbed.—Welch v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 880.

(D) Objections to Evidence, Motions to Strike Out, and Exceptions.

§ 696. A motion to exclude all of the testimony of a witness is properly overruled if a part of it is competent.—Nichols v. State (Ark.) 1003.

(E) Arguments and Conduct of Counsel.

§ 715. On a trial for assault with intent to kill, accused held not prejudiced by certain argument of the state's attorney.—Derrick v. State (Ark.) 506.

§ 721. Questions asked accused on cross-examination held not open to the objection that they alluded to the failure of accused to testify or make any statement at the examining trial.—Welch v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 880.

§ 729. The conduct of the state's attorney in the examination of a witness held not ground for reversal, in view of the instructions of the court.—Welch v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 880.

§ 730. Argument of the state's attorney concerning certain contradictory statements of witnesses held not error.—Ferguson v. State (Ark.) 236.

§ 730. The error of the prosecuting attorney in his argument to the jury held obviated by the charge of the court.—Craft v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 547.

§ 730. Under Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 770, held, that it was reversible error to ask defendant whether he testified on a former trial.—Brown v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 565.

(F) Province of Court and Jury in General.

In particular criminal prosecutions.

See Breach of the Peace, § 10; Larceny, § 68.

§ 737. The jury are the exclusive judges of the facts proved.—Roberts v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 388.

§ 739. Where there was no evidence that the conviction pleaded in bar was final, or whether an appeal had been taken therein, or a motion for new trial therein granted, the court properly refused to submit the issue, notwithstanding Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 750.—Lindley v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 873.

§ 739. Where the conviction relied on in bar is no defense, the evidence and plea of former conviction may be disregarded; but, where there is any view of the evidence under which the plea amounts to a bar, the issue must be submitted.—Lindley v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 873.

§ 741. In a prosecution for seduction, the jury held to be judges of the weight of the corroborating evidence.—Nichols v. State (Ark.) 1003.

§ 741. It is only where there is no evidence tending to connect accused with the commission of the crime that the court is warranted in taking the case from the jury.—Spencer v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 800.

§ 741. It is the exclusive province of the jury to determine the weight of testimony introduced both by the state and defendant.—State v. Shelton (Mo.) 732.

§ 741. Where the evidence tended to prove every material fact necessary to conviction, requested instructions in the nature of demurrers to the evidence were properly refused.—State v. Payne (Mo.) 1062.

§ 741. It is the province of the court to pass on the question whether the state's evidence has enough probative force to raise an issue of fact.—State v. Claybaugh (Mo. App.) 319.

§ 742. In a prosecution for robbery, the jury held to have the right to accept the identification of defendant by the prosecuting witnesses as against that of accused and his witnesses.—Wynn v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 516.

§ 742. The jury are the exclusive judges of the credibility of witnesses.—Roberts v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 388.

§ 753½. In declaring the law on any subject, the court should not comment on the facts.—State v. Shelton (Mo.) 732.

§ 761. In the absence of evidence as to possession of recently stolen property, a charge thereon is erroneous as assuming a fact.—Leonard v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 549.

§§ 763, 764. Instruction that there was evidence "tending" to impeach witnesses held on the weight of evidence.—McCleary v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 26.

§§ 763, 764. An instruction on a trial for theft held erroneous, as on the weight of the evidence.—Lee v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 399.

§§ 763, 764. In a prosecution for theft of cotton in the open boll by a lessee from his lessor, an instruction which was on the weight of the evidence held erroneous.—Gipson v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 557.

(G) Necessity, Requisites, and Sufficiency of Instructions.

In particular criminal prosecutions.

See Burglary, § 46; False Pretenses, § 52; Homicide, §§ 295-310; Larceny, §§ 70-77; Perjury, § 37; Rape, § 59.

For offenses against liquor laws, see Intoxicating Liquors, § 239.

§ 770. There was no error in an instruction which fully covered the charge in the information, and required the jury to find every essential fact necessary to constitute the offense.—State v. Wilson (Mo.) 701.

§ 770. In a prosecution for assault to murder a child, held error to refuse to charge on a certain theory.—Martin v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 558.

§ 770. In support of the presumption of innocence, every theory of the crime which the evidence suggests should be charged, upon accused's request.—Martin v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 558.

§ 772. On a trial for violating the local option law, an instruction held not subject to the criticism that it did not correctly state the law as to the time within which accused might or might not be convicted.—Matthews v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 544.

§ 775. An instruction as to an alibi held to sufficiently cover the defense.—State v. Shelton (Mo.) 732.

§ 775. In a prosecution for carrying a pistol, refusal of accused's request on alibi held error.—Schaper v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 257.

§ 778. An instruction, fully covering the presumption of innocence, and informing the jury that the burden of proof rests on the state, is proper.—State v. Wilson (Mo.) 701.

§ 778. A charge held to correctly instruct as to the presumption of innocence.—Flournoy v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 26.

§ 780. An instruction as to the testimony of an accomplice held to substantially accord with the uniform rulings of the Supreme Court.—State v. Shelton (Mo.) 732.

§ 784. It is only when a conviction is sought on circumstantial evidence alone that it is necessary to charge on the weight of such evidence.—State v. Hubbard (Mo.) 694.

§ 784. An instruction as to circumstantial evidence held to have declared the law substantially in harmony with holdings of the Supreme Court.—State v. Shelton (Mo.) 732.

§ 785. An instruction as to the credibility of witnesses and the weight of testimony held sufficient.—State v. Shelton (Mo.) 732.

§ 786. In a murder case, held that the jury were properly instructed as to statements by defendant.—State v. Wilson (Mo.) 701.

§ 787. An instruction in a misdemeanor case, that the jury could not use as a fact against accused that he failed to testify in his own behalf, was proper.—Matthews v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 544.

§ 789. An instruction, requiring the jury to find defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, and directing them in the usual manner that, if they entertain such a doubt, they should give him the benefit of it, is proper.—State v. Wilson (Mo.) 701.

§ 789. A charge held to correctly instruct as to reasonable doubt.—Flournoy v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 26.

§ 811. In declaring the law on any subject, the court should not call the jury's attention especially to particular facts developed in the testimony.—State v. Shelton (Mo.) 732.

§ 811. The manner and means of inducing an accomplice to testify with a view to a lighter punishment are matters for argument to the jury, but it would be error to point out those facts, and tell the jury to specially consider them in weighing his testimony.—State v. Shelton (Mo.) 732.

§ 814. In a prosecution for swindling, a requested instruction that the state was bound to prove certain facts, which were undisputed, beyond a reasonable doubt, held properly refused.—Glover v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 396.

§ 823. On a trial for assault with intent to kill, an instruction held not misleading in view of other instructions.—Derrick v. State (Ark.) 506.

(H) Requests for Instructions.

§ 823. Where accused requested a charge on manslaughter, which was given as asked, and requested no other on that subject, and saved no exceptions to the failure of the court to instruct more fully on that degree of defense, he could not complain.—State v. Linn (Mo.) 679.

§ 829. Where the charge given covers the rights of accused, and states the law as fully and favorably to him as he could ask, it is not error to refuse other charges, though correct in law.—State v. Linn (Mo.) 679.

§ 829. A requested instruction covered by those given held properly refused.—State v. Fleetwood (Mo.) 696; Same v. Payne (Mo.) 1062.

§ 829. An instruction as to the testimony of an accomplice held sufficient to cover a requested instruction.—State v. Shelton (Mo.) 732.

§ 830. Accused requesting an instruction submitting an issue must request a correct instruction.—Jackson v. State (Ark.) 101.

§ 830. In a prosecution under an indictment for theft and for fraudulently receiving stolen property, held, that a special instruction requested by defendant should, at least in substance, have been given.—Eubanks v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 35.

§ 830. In a prosecution for theft, under Pen. Code 1895, art. 869, a request to charge, though erroneous, held sufficient to call the court's attention to its omission to require the jury to find the value of the property taken, etc.—Johnson v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 877.

(K) Verdict.

In prosecution for assault and battery, see Assault and Battery, § 97.

XIII. MOTIONS FOR NEW TRIAL AND IN ARREST.

§ 921. Where there was no exception to the admission of evidence, the question cannot be raised on motion for a new trial.—Batte v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 561.

§ 925. A certain showing held not ground for setting aside the verdict in a criminal case.—State v. Linn (Mo.) 679.

§ 941. Certain newly discovered evidence held merely cumulative, and not ground for a new trial.—Roberts v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 388.

§ 957. Jurors speak through their verdict, and cannot violate secrets of the jury room and tell of partiality or misconduct that transpired there, nor speak of methods which induced to produce the verdict.—State v. Linn (Mo.) 679.

§ 958. An affidavit on the subject of newly discovered evidence must be supported by oath of the accused and affidavits of the proposed witnesses, and an affidavit by counsel is insufficient.—State v. Wilson (Mo.) 671.

XIV. JUDGMENT, SENTENCE, AND FINAL COMMITMENT.

Right to correct sentence on habeas corpus proceedings to obtain discharge, see Habeas Corpus, § 100.

Suspension of sentence as constituting a parole, see Pardon, § 7.

§ 993. A court held to have no power, where its judgment of conviction has partly been complied with, to revise it, and substitute therefor an entirely new judgment, at least at a subsequent term.—Ex parte Cornwall (Mo.) 666.

XV. APPEAL AND ERROR, AND CERTIORARI.

(A) Form of Remedy, Jurisdiction, and Right of Review.

§ 1024. The state cannot appeal from a judgment for accused, unless a right of appeal is given by statute.—State v. Craig (Mo.) 1006; Same v. Smith (Mo.) 1007; Same v. Ballard, Id.; Same v. Geier, Id.; Same v. Chambers (Mo.) 1008; Same v. Miller, Id.

§ 1024. Under Rev. St. 1899, §§ 2708, 2709 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 1592, 1593), the state cannot appeal from a judgment overruling a demurrer to a plea in abatement of the indictment, based upon matters dehors the face of the indictment.—State v. Craig (Mo.) 1006; Same v. Smith (Mo.) 1007; Same v. Ballard, Id.; Same v. Geier, Id.; Same v. Chambers (Mo.) 1008; Same v. Miller, Id.

(B) Presentation and Reservation in Lower Court of Grounds of Review.

§ 1033. To take advantage, on appeal, of insufficient proof of venue, there must have been a contest over it in the trial court, except where the issue is fought out on the trial as to whether the offense was in the county where the venue was laid.—Munger v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 874.

§ 1037. An assignment of error as to improper argument is not before the court for review, in absence of the proper preservation of objections and exceptions to the court's action on objections during the argument.—State v. Wilson (Mo.) 671.

§ 1038. Statement of what must be done in the trial court, that a charge in a misdemeanor case may be reviewed for omissions therein.—Durham v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 553.

§ 1043. An objection to evidence to be considered on appeal should at least briefly indicate some reason therefor.—State v. Wilson (Mo.) 701.

§ 1044. Objections that the indictment was found without evidence, and that the names of registration officers were not indorsed thereon, could not be raised for the first time on appeal.—State v. Tiernan (Mo.) 728.

§ 1051. To take advantage, on appeal, of insufficient proof of venue, the matter must be preserved by bill of exceptions, except where the issue is fought out on the trial as to whether the offense was in the county where the venue was laid, when it will be noticed without bill of exceptions.—Munger v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 874.

§ 1056. Criticism of a charge made in the brief on appeal cannot be considered, when not mentioned on the motion for new trial, nor presented by exceptions on the trial.—Flournoy v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 26.

§ 1064. The action of the trial court in including evidence not being preserved by the motion for new trial, held, it cannot be considered on appeal.—State v. Fleetwood (Mo.) 696.

§ 1064. Objections that the indictment was found without evidence, and that the names of registration officers were not indorsed thereon, could not be raised on appeal, where no motion to quash, or for a new trial or in arrest had been made.—State v. Tiernan (Mo.) 728.

§ 1064. An objection that accused, after being arrested, was taken before the circuit attorney for a statement, and the latter's statement with reference thereto, not having been raised by motion for a new trial, could not be considered on appeal.—State v. Tiernan (Mo.) 728.

§ 1064. Whatever occurs during the examination and qualification of a panel of jurors from which the trial panel is to be selected must be preserved, not only in the bill of exceptions, but attention must be directed to a complaint concerning the same in the motion for a new trial.—State v. Shelton (Mo.) 732.

§ 1064. Criticism of a charge made in the brief on appeal cannot be considered, when not mentioned on the motion for new trial, nor presented by exceptions on the trial.—Flournoy v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 26.

§ 1064. Accused's motion for a new trial, which merely quoted several paragraphs of the charge and complained of harmful error in giving them, without pointing out the defect, was too general to warrant consideration of the assignment on appeal.—Yell v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 871.

(C) Proceedings for Transfer of Cause, and Effect Thereof.

§ 1074. Under Const. art. 7, § 42, the filing of an affidavit held not a prerequisite to an appeal from a conviction of a criminal case in justice's court.—Potts v. State (Ark.) 481.

§ 1074. Kirby's Dig. § 4666, taken from Acts 1873, p. 430, held to apply only to civil actions in justice's courts.—Potts v. State (Ark.) 481.

§ 1074. Under Acts 1905, p. 375, and Cole Cr. Proc. (Kirby's Dig. § 2576-2582), a circuit court held not authorized to dismiss an appeal in a criminal case because of the want of an affidavit of appeal.—Potts v. State (Ark.) 481.

(D) Record and Proceedings Not in Record.

§ 1086. The arraignment of accused and the entry of a plea must be shown by the record proper, or the conviction must be reversed.—State v. Vaughn (Mo.) 677.

§ 1086. The record on appeal from the county court held required to show the indictment was presented in the district court and transferred to the county court.—Richardson v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 560.

§ 1087. An extreme doubt as to whether the disclosure of the record on appeal as to the entry of a nunc pro tunc order, extending the time for filing a bill of exceptions, authorized the filing of the bill, will be resolved in favor of defendant, though the action after lapse of two terms, without notice to the prosecuting officer and without any showing as to any memorandum, either on the court's docket or record, that error was committed in preserving the record, is by no means approved.—State v. Shelton (Mo.) 732.

§ 1090. On appeal, certain matters as to which no bill of exception was reserved held not reviewable.—Franks v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 21.

§ 1090. That a jury received evidence and wrong information as to the evidence in the case from one of their members cannot be reviewed, in the absence of bill of exceptions.—Brandt v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 23.

§ 1090. Where the indictment is valid, and there is neither bill of exceptions, statement of facts, nor motion for new trial, the judgment will be affirmed.—Walters v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 26.

§ 1091. Where there is an issue between the explanation of a bill of exceptions by the court and the matters recited and proved up by bystanders, which is in doubt, the recitals in the statement of facts may be looked to.—Zachary v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 263.

§ 1091. A statement of the judge to a bill of exceptions in part refused held to be accepted, where the bill as proved by bystanders did not in terms deny it.—Zachary v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 263.

§ 1091. Bills of exception setting out objections to testimony of accused's wife on cross-examination as not limited to a cross-examination of her direct testimony, but stating nothing to show that it was not so limited, cannot be considered.—Ferguson v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 551.

§ 1091. A bill of exceptions, grouping all the matters complained of on the trial, will not be reviewed.—Cabral v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 872.

§ 1092. A bill of exceptions not filed within the time fixed cannot be considered.—State v. Elschinger (Mo.) 691.

§ 1092. An order extending the time for filing the bill of exceptions, made in vacation after the expiration of the time fixed by a prior order, is void.—State v. Elschinger (Mo.) 691.

§ 1092. That bills of exceptions and the statement of facts filed after adjournment may be considered, held, the record must show an order authorizing such filing.—Durham v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 533.

§ 1093. A bill of exceptions held not to be aided by statement of facts or other parts of the record.—Munger v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 874.

§ 1094. Where, on appeal, the record contains neither bill of exceptions nor statement of facts, the judgment will be affirmed.—English v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 389.

§ 1097. In absence of a statement of facts proved at trial, the Court of Criminal Appeals held unable to review the denial of a motion for new trial in a criminal case on the ground of newly discovered evidence showing insanity.—Groves v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 258.

§ 1097. The prosecuting attorney's reference, in violation of Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 770, to defendant's failure to testify, held available on review, even in the absence of a statement of facts.—Brown v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 565.

§ 1098. A literal transcript of the stenographer's notes will not be considered on review as a statement of facts.—Brown v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 565.

§ 1104. In transcript on appeal the matters of the record proper should be distinct from the bill of exceptions.—State v. Vaughn (Mo.) 677.

§ 1109. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 2716 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1595), an appeal case will not be dismissed for failure of defendant to file an abstract of the case, where he presents a complete record of the case.—State v. Tuller (Mo. App.) 313.

§ 1109. Conviction affirmed on defective record.—English v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 389.

§ 1114. Where the record did not contain the testimony or any bills of exception, held, that only the record proper can be reviewed.—State v. Linn (Mo.) 740.

§ 1114. In the absence of a statement of facts, the bill of exceptions must show that it contains all the evidence as to the matter complained of.—Brown v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 565.

§ 1118. That refusal of continuance may be reviewed, held the application therefor must be preserved in the bill of exceptions.—State v. Fleetwood (Mo.) 696.

§ 1119. There is no merit in a complaint that an attorney for defendant in his preliminary hearing took a seat at the counsel table for the state and began assisting the prosecuting attorney, where no more appears than the fact that defendant interposed an objection to his sitting as counsel for the state, and the court sustained it.—State v. Wilson (Mo.) 671.

§ 1120. A bill of exceptions complaining of the exclusion of evidence held defective for failing to show what the answer of a witness would have been.—Wesley v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 550.

(E) Assignment of Errors and Briefs.

§ 1130. Where accused files no brief, and is not represented on appeal, the Supreme Court can only look to the errors designated in the motion for a new trial.—State v. Wilson (Mo.) 671.

§ 1130. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 2716 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1595), an appeal case will not be dismissed for failure of defendant to file a brief and argument, where he presents a complete record of the case.—State v. Tuller (Mo. App.) 313.

(G) Review.

§ 1137. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 2535 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1509), accused cannot complain on appeal of a charge given for her.—State v. Payne (Mo.) 1062.

§ 1144. In the absence of bill of exceptions and of any error in the record proper, it will be presumed that the accused had a fair trial, and the judgment must be affirmed.—State v. Elschinger (Mo.) 691.

§ 1144. In absence of a statement of facts to enable the appellate court to consider the ground urged in the motion for new trial, which was made on the ground of newly discovered evidence, all presumptions will be indulged in favor of the judgment of conviction.—Groves v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 258.

§ 1144. Where there is no special plea in the record, the court cannot assume that a plea of former conviction was interposed, requiring a submission of the issue to the jury.—Lindley v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 873.

§ 1144. Where the court excluded a conversation introductory to impeaching matter testified to, and the record did not contain a statement of the purport of the introductory conversation, the ruling should not be disturbed.—Welch v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 880.

§ 1151. In the absence of a showing of abuse of discretion, held, refusal of continuance cannot be reviewed.—State v. Fleetwood (Mo.) 696.

§ 1153. The allowing of leading questions by the state's attorney in examining a witness is not reversible error unless the trial judge abused his discretion.—Derrick v. State (Ark.) 506.

§ 1158. The conclusion of the trial court, after hearing evidence, that defendant had waived a preliminary examination before a justice of the peace, as recited in his transcript, held not to be disturbed on appeal.—State v. Shelton (Mo.) 732.

§ 1159. A verdict of the jury as to questions of fact will not be disturbed on appeal if there is substantial evidence to support it.—Ferguson v. State (Ark.) 236.

§ 1159. Where there is evidence sufficient to take the case to the jury, the verdict will not be disturbed, in the absence of other errors, though the evidence is slight.—Spencer v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 800.

§ 1159. There being substantial evidence to support a verdict of guilty, held, it cannot be reviewed.—State v. Fleetwood (Mo.) 696.

§ 1159. Where a verdict has been approved by the trial court, and the evidence, if believed, is sufficient, the conviction will not be disturbed.—Brandt v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 23.

§ 1159. Where, in a prosecution for disturbing religious worship, there was some evidence justifying a finding of guilty, the judgment of conviction will be affirmed.—Buckley v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 546.

§ 1167. Where the court withdrew from the jury the first count of the information, and submitted the case on the second count only, a misjoinder of the counts was not prejudicial to accused.—State v. Keating (Mo.) 699.

§ 1167. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 2522 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1503), that the first information was not formally quashed on the record when the amended information was filed is not available as a ground for reversal on appeal.—State v. Payne (Mo.) 1062.

§ 1167. One convicted of simple assault cannot complain because the information, attempting to charge an aggravated assault, is defective.—Jaehnig v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 267.

§ 1169. Error in the admission of evidence, in a prosecution for violating the local option law, held not cured by an instruction taking the evidence from the jury.—Haney v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 34.

§ 1169. Evidence in a prosecution for violating the local option law, held inadmissible, as tending to bring about a higher punishment than the minimum.—Haney v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 24.

§ 1169. Accused held not prejudiced by the erroneous admission of evidence that witness, after warning accused, left a religious meeting because he believed there was going to be a disturbance.—Boyd v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 393.

§ 1169. The error, if any, in allowing evidence of a fact established by evidence received without objection, and not contradicted, is not ground for reversal.—Welch v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 880.

§ 1170. A ruling excluding testimony held not prejudicial error, where there was an opportunity afterwards to introduce the same evidence.—Zachary v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 263.

§ 1171. On trial for assault with intent to kill, an inaccuracy in the argument of the state's attorney held not ground for reversal.—Derrick v. State (Ark.) 506.

§ 1172. In a larceny prosecution, under an information containing a count under the habitual criminal statute (Rev. St. 1899, § 2379 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 1461]), error in an instruction submitting the case on that count for not requiring a finding that the larceny was committed in the county of the venue did not prejudice accused, where she was not convicted under the statute.—State v. Payne (Mo.) 1062.

§ 1172. One convicted of simple assault cannot complain because the court misdirected the jury as to the law on aggravated assault.—Jaehnig v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 267.

§ 1172. An instruction in a rape case held not reversible error.—Munger v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 874.

§ 1180. A decision on appeal that the evidence is sufficient to take the case to the jury is the law of the case, and is conclusive on a subsequent appeal, where the evidence is substantially the same.—Spencer v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 800.

(H) Determination and Disposition of Cause.

§ 1182. Where no error appears in a record containing no statement of facts or bill of exceptions, the judgment will be affirmed.—Meyer v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 22; Davis v. Same, Id.

St. 1906, p. 1461), in a prosecution for larceny, the state could plead accused's former conviction for grand larceny and imprisonment in, and discharge from, the state penitentiary, and could show such fact by the record in the former prosecution and the penitentiary records showing service of the sentence imposed therein.—State v. Payne (Mo.) 1062.

§ 1204. In a larceny prosecution, in which information charged an aggravated offense under the habitual criminal statute (Rev. St. 1899, § 2379 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 1461]), the state penitentiary records were admissible to identify accused as the person who had served a sentence in the penitentiary under the former conviction.—State v. Payne (Mo.) 1062.

I. NATURE AND GROUNDS IN GENERAL.

§ 2. The laws of the state wherein a personal injury occurred govern the question of whether punitive damages should be awarded.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith (Ky.) 806.

II. NOMINAL DAMAGES.

§ 9. A contractor, sued for failing to complete a building within the agreed time, is liable for nominal damages and costs, though he shows that during the inexcusable delay the building would not have had a use or rental value to the owner.—Smith v. Gunn (Tex. Civ. App.) 919.

III. GROUNDS AND SUBJECTS OF COMPENSATORY DAMAGES.

(A) Direct or Remote, Contingent, or Prospective, Consequences or Losses.

Element of damages for negligent transmission of telegram, see Telegraphs and Telephones, § 68.

§ 23. A party breaching a contract held not liable for special damages unless they were within the contemplation of the parties when the contract was made, or unless the defaulting party had notice that such damages would result from its breach.—Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. Louisville Cotton Oil Co. (Ky.) 852.

(B) Aggravation, Mitigation, and Reduction of Loss.

§ 62. It was plaintiff's duty, on losing a prospective tenant for his building for a stated term through defendant's failure to deliver a message, to use reasonable diligence to secure another tenant, and reduce the damages.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Williams (Tex. Civ. App.) 280.

(C) Interest, Costs, and Expenses of Litigation.

§ 68. Interest is recoverable in an action for breach of a verbal contract, though not stipulated for in the contract.—Wells v. Hobbs (Tex. Civ. App.) 451.

V. EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.

For ejection of passenger, see Carriers, § 382.
 For injury to passenger, see Carriers, § 319.

§ 87. Exemplary damages cannot be recovered unless the plaintiff sustained actual damages.—Thouron v. Skirvin (Tex. Civ. App.) 55.

§ 91. Where the negligence from which a personal injury results is gross, punitive damages may be awarded.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith (Ky.) 806.

VI. MEASURE OF DAMAGES.(B) Injuries to Property.

For negligent transmission of telegram, see Telegraphs and Telephones, § 70.

§ 109. Rule as to the measure of damages for the temporary injury to land, stated.—Adam v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 1136.

§ 110. Rule as to the measure of damages for the permanent injury to land, stated.—Adam v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 1136.

§ 112. Where a matured crop is destroyed, the crop is treated as personal property, and the measure of damages is the market value of the crop standing on the ground.—Adam v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 1136.

§ 112. Measure of damages laid down for destruction of a crop of alfalfa by water thrown back on the land by an insufficient railroad culvert.—Adam v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 1136.

§ 112. Measure of damages for growing grass burned from pasture land, stated.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Couch (Tex. Civ. App.) 67.

§ 112. The measure of damages for injury to a crop is the difference between the value of what would have been produced, and what was produced, less the expense of cultivating, harvesting, and marketing.—Texas Co. v. Lacour (Tex. Civ. App.) 424.

(C) Breach of Contract.

§ 122. In an action for the contract price of a building and tanks, the measure of defendants' damages for failure to complete them within the contract time stated.—J. T. Stark Grain Co. v. Harry Bros. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 847.

VII. INADEQUATE AND EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.

For injuries to passenger, see Carriers, § 319.
 For negligent transmission of telegram, see Telegraphs and Telephones, § 71.

§ 131. A verdict for personal injuries for $5,000 held so excessive as to require a new trial.—Louisville Ry. Co. v. Roser (Ky.) 149.

§ 132. In an action for injuries to a servant, a verdict allowing plaintiff $1,500 held not excessive.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Reed (Ark.) 645.

§ 132. In an action for injuries to a married woman, a verdict allowing her $3,000 held not excessive.—City of Louisville v. Tompkins (Ky.) 174.

§ 132. Evidence held to sustain a recovery of $12,500 for personal injuries.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith (Ky.) 806.

§ 132. In an action for injuries, a verdict allowing plaintiff $1,125 was not excessive.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Campbell (Ky.) 848.

§ 132. In a personal injury action, a verdict for $3,000 held not excessive.—Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Sanchez (Tex. Civ. App.) 44.

§ 133. In an action by a husband for injuries to the wife, the verdict held not excessive.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Sandlin (Tex. Civ. App.) 60.

§ 134. $10,000 damages for personal injuries held not excessive.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Dunbar (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

§ 143. In an action for personal injuries, special damages, to be recoverable, must be specifically alleged.—Lexington Ry. Co. v. Johnson (Ky.) 830.

§ 153. An allegation of special damages in a blank sum amounts to no allegation and affords no basis for a judgment therefor.—Lexington Ry. Co. v. Johnson (Ky.) 830.

(B) Evidence.

§ 163. In an action by the husband for personal injuries to his wife, defendant has the burden of proving that the husband could by proper care and attention avoid the damages sustained by reason of the wife's injury.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Sandlin (Tex. Civ. App.) 60.

§ 163. In an action for injuries to a crop, evidence held not to shift the burden of proof to defendant to show the expense of making and marketing the crop.—Texas Co. v. Lacour (Tex. Civ. App.) 424.

§ 167. Where there was evidence of a permanent injury, it was not error to admit life tables to show plaintiff's expectancy.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Campbell (Ky.) 848.

§ 185. In an action for personal injuries received in a railroad wreck, evidence held to sustain a finding by the jury that plaintiff was rendered impotent.—Epstein v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (Mo. App.) 366.

§ 187. Where a married woman is a housekeeper, it is not necessary to prove her earning power to entitle her to recover damages for permanent injuries.—City of Louisville v. Tompkins (Ky.) 174.

§ 188. Evidence as to what plaintiff's crop would have afterwards brought in the market held insufficient to show the amount of loss by the injury sued for.—Texas Co. v. Lacour (Tex. Civ. App.) 424.

(C) Proceedings for Assessment.

§ 208. The extent of loss of a married woman's earning capacity by alleged permanent injuries is to be determined by the jury in accordance with their common knowledge and experience.—City of Louisville v. Tompkins (Ky.) 174.

§ 208. In an action for injury to plaintiff's wife from fright and humiliation, held, that whether the shock and results were proximately caused by defendant's acts, and whether the injury should have been foreseen as a natural and probable consequence of such acts, should have been submitted to the jury.—Alexander v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 572.

§ 215. Where there is evidence that an injury at a crossing was caused by a reckless disregard of human life, an instruction on the subject of punitive damages is proper.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith (Ky.) 806.

§ 216. An instruction authorizing a recovery for doctors' fees and loss of time in excess of the amount alleged held erroneous.—Heinz v. United Rys. Co. of St. Louis (Mo. App.) 346.

§ 217. An instruction, in an action against a railroad company for the destruction of a crop of alfalfa from water being thrown back upon the land because of the insufficiency of a culvert put in by the company over a natural water course, held erroneous.—Adam v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 1136.

§ 218. In an action for breach of contract, certain charges held properly refused as inap-not misleading.—J. T. Stark Grain Co. v. Harry Bros. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 947.

II. ACTIONS FOR CAUSING DEATH.

(A) Right of Action and Defenses.

§ 7. Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 2865 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1644), giving a right of action for damages for death caused by wrongful act, held not to inflict a penalty, but merely to give compensation.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. McNamare (Ark.) 102.

§ 8. The rights of the parties to an action for wrongful death must be determined in accordance with the law of the state where the injury occurred.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Corman (Ark.) 116.

§ 11. Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 2865 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1644), giving a right of action for wrongful death, held not to create a new cause of action, but to simply transmit one theretofore existing and which would otherwise have abated on the death of the injured party.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. McNamare (Ark.) 102.

§ 31. Kirby's Dig. §§ 6289, 6290, relating to wrongful death, held to create a cause of action for the benefit of the widow and next of kin.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Corman (Ark.) 116.

§ 31. The widow of a decedent held one of his heirs at law under Kirby's Dig. §§ 6289, 6290, providing for an action for wrongful death.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Corman (Ark.) 116.

§ 31. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 2864, as amended by Laws 1905, p. 135 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1637), the administrator held entitled to sue for the negligent death of one of mature age, unmarried, and childless.—Pratt v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 1125.

§ 32. On the wrongful death of a person, two causes of action arise—one for the benefit of the estate and the other for the next of kin.—Murphy v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (Ark.) 636.

(B) Jurisdiction, Venue, and Limitations.

§ 35. An action held maintainable in Arkansas under Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 2965 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1644); such statute being substantially similar to the Arkansas statute on the subject.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. McNamare (Ark.) 102.

§ 35. An action for wrongful death is transitory.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Corman (Ark.) 116.

(C) Parties and Process.

§ 41. Decedent's widow and child held his only heirs at law within Kirby's Dig. §§ 6289, 6290, and were therefore the only parties plaintiff required in a suit for wrongful death.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Corman (Ark.) 116.

(D) Pleading and Evidence.

§ 47. The complaint in an action for wrongful death held to state a cause of action under Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 2865 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1644), and not under section 2864.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. McNamare (Ark.) 102.

§ 58. In a death action under Ky. St. § 6 (Russell's St. § 11), passed pursuant to Const. § 241, held, that plaintiff need not show decedent's exercise of ordinary care, or ignorance of the danger, though contributory negligence is available as a defense.—Warren's Adm'r v. Jeunesse (Ky.) 862.

(E) Damages, Forfeiture, or Fine.

§ 78. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 2864, as amended by Laws 1905, p. 135 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1637), the jury, in imposing the penalty on a railroad for the negligent death of an employé, held authorized to consider the nature of the culpable act and the age and earning capacity of decedent.—Pratt v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 1125.

§ 40. The description of the land conveyed by a deed which referred to the grant and field notes for a more particular description was sufficient, if the description in the instruments referred to sufficiently described the land.—Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Kimball (Tex.) 533.

(C) Execution.

§ 53. Evidence held not to justify a finding that a deed through which plaintiff claimed title in trespass to try title was a forgery, so that a requested charge submitting the issue of forgery was properly refused.—Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Kimball (Tex.) 533.

III. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.(B) Property Conveyed.

§ 111. The whole description of a deed, artificially drawn, should be read without giving special prominence to any one expression.—Bentley v. Napier (Ky.) 180.

§ 113. The words "more or less" after the description of the quantity of land conveyed held to relieve only the necessity for exactness.—Boggs v. Bush (Ky.) 220.

(C) Estates and Interests Created.

§ 124. A deed construed, and held to pass the fee to the grantee on the death of the grantor, subject only to the dower right of the grantor's wife.—Rector v. Rector (Ky.) 518.

§ 128. The rule in Shelley's Case held not to apply to a deed.—Hopkins v. Hopkins (Tex.) 15.

§ 129. The words "children" and "issue" in a deed are not to be given the meaning of "heirs," when to do so would defeat the lawful intention of the grantor.—Hopkins v. Hopkins (Tex.) 15.

(E) Conditions and Restrictions.

§ 145. If it be doubtful whether a clause in a deed be a condition or a covenant, courts will incline to the latter construction.—Patterson v. Patterson (Ky.) 169.

IV. JURISDICTION, PROCEEDINGS, AND RELIEF.

(A) Jurisdiction, Venue, and Limitations.

§ 57. Divorce proceedings are exclusively within the jurisdiction of the chancery courts.—Sebastian v. Rose (Ky.) 120.

(F) Judgment or Decree.

§ 152. While a defendant in a divorce action may refuse to defend under an agreement with plaintiff, the decree of divorce cannot be the subject of agreement, but is the court's action upon the allegations and proof.—Sebastian v. Rose (Ky.) 120.

§ 169. A recital in a divorce decree that a part of the judgment for alimony was paid by defendant and that the case was "filed away" was in effect keeping control of the case to be redocketed upon notice; the parties not having been dismissed.—Sebastian v. Rose (Ky.) 120.

(G) Appeal.

§ 177. A decree of absolute divorce is final, and cannot be reviewed on appeal by the trial court; only divorces from bed and board being subject to retrial under the direct provisions of Civ. Code Prac. § 427.—Sebastian v. Rose (Ky.) 120.

V. ALIMONY, ALLOWANCES, AND DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY.

Authority of attorney to compromise decree for alimony, see Attorney and Olient, §§ 101, 103.

§ 239. While a new trial cannot be granted by the trial court upon entering a decree of absolute divorce, and the judgment is final unless annulled upon petition of both parties under Civ. Code Prac. § 426, a new trial may be granted upon the question of allowing or refusing alimony.—Sebastian v. Rose (Ky.) 120.

§ 240. What may be considered in awarding the wife alimony in a divorce action stated.—Sebastian v. Rose (Ky.) 120.

§ 245. Ky. St. 1909, § 2123 (Russell's St. § 73), contemplates further control by chancery courts over decrees of divorce adjudging alimony, so that the court granting a divorce may modify the decree by enlarging, lessening, or suspending the allowance of alimony.—Sebastian v. Rose (Ky.) 120.

§ 269. While under the direct provisions of Ky. St. 1909, § 1663 (Russell's St. § 154), a chancery judgment may be enforced by writs allowable on a judgment at law, under subsection 2 circuit courts may as an incident to their chancery jurisdiction summarily enforce their decrees by attachment and imprisonment, so that payment of the balance of an alimony decree could be enforced by contempt proceedings.—Sebastian v. Rose (Ky.) 120.

§ 280. Judgments allowing or refusing alimony are reviewable.—Sebastian v. Rose (Ky.) 120.

§ 286. On appeal from an order denying a motion for rule to show cause why defendant should not be compelled to pay the balance of alimony awarded plaintiff in a divorce action, the question whether plaintiff is entitled to alimony is not open; the only question being the amount thereof.—Sebastian v. Rose (Ky.) 120.

VI. CUSTODY AND SUPPORT OF CHILDREN.

§ 298. On the granting of a divorce, the custody of very young children will generally be awarded to the mother.—Shallcross v. Shallcross (Ky.) 223.

§ 298. Where a child of divorced parents has reached years of discretion, its wishes as to custody will be considered, but are not controlling.—Shallcross v. Shallcross (Ky.) 223.

§ 298. In divorce proceedings, the paramount consideration as to awarding the custody of the children held the welfare of the child.—Knepper v. Knepper (Mo. App.) 1117.

§ 298. That plaintiff, a divorced woman, spent two nights at a hotel with her present husband before her marriage to him, held not to show that she was so depraved as to be unfit to retain the custody of an 11 year old daughter of the former marriage.—Knepper v. Knepper (Mo. App.) 1117.

§ 303. Ky. St. 1909, § 2123 (Russell's St. § 73), held not to prevent the court from modifying a divorce decree in so far as it related to the custody and care of children, on its own motion or without petition by either parent.—Shallcross v. Shallcross (Ky.) 223.

§ 303. A husband, having instituted a proceeding to compel his wife to comply with a visitation proceeding in a divorce decree, could not object to the modification of the decree striking out his right of visitation because he was not served with a notice of such proceedings.—Shallcross v. Shallcross (Ky.) 223.

§ 303. A provision in a divorce decree as to seeing the son of the parties held properly stricken, where, by reason of the father's inebriety and profligate habits, he was not a proper person to associate with his son.—Shallcross v. Shallcross (Ky.) 223.

§ 312. A decree on a cross-petition in divorce proceedings held not to be presumed to have included a finding that the wife was an adulteress.—Knepper v. Knepper (Mo. App.) 1117.

§ 1. In determining the domicile of a person, all surrounding circumstances which tend to influence or explain her acts by which her residence is sought to be established, such as the facts stated, should be considered.—Helm's Trustee v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 196.

§ 1. The question of domicile is usually one of intent; slight circumstances often being sufficient to determine the question.—Helm's Trustee v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 196.

§ 10. Where a domicile is once established, intent to abandon it and adopt a new one must be satisfactorily shown.—Helm's Trustee v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 196.

DONATIONS.

See Gifts.

DOWER.

III. RIGHTS AND REMEDIES OF WIDOW.

§ 79. In proceedings for assignment of dower, evidence held not to support a finding that the land could not be divided without prejudice to the widow and heirs.—Johnson v. Johnson (Ark.) 636.

§ 101. A widow's dower is to be carved out of the specific property of which her husband was possessed, and not out of the proceeds of its sale.—Johnson v. Johnson (Ark.) 636.

§ 101. Kirby's Dig. § 2707, relating to sale of lands in proceedings to allot dower, construed.—Johnson v. Johnson (Ark.) 636.

§ 101. The fact that it would be to the best interest of the widow and heirs to sell the land and divide the proceeds instead of dividing the land itself and allotting to the widow her proportionate share held no ground for a sale of the land and division of the proceeds under Kirby's Dig. § 2707.—Johnson v. Johnson (Ark.) 636.

I. CREATION, EXISTENCE, AND TERMINATION.

§ 5. The right to a way by prescription may be established by adverse possession for 10 years.—Sanford v. Kern (Mo.) 1051.

§ 8. A private way could not be acquired by adverse possession if the use was permissive.—Roland v. O'Neal (Ky.) 827.

§ 8. Adverse possession sufficient to establish a right to a passageway across land is not destroyed by its use by others with the acquiescence of the person claiming under adverse possession, as under Rev. St. 1893, § 9463 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4346), private roads shall be free to be traveled by all persons as a public road.—Sanford v. Kern (Mo.) 1051.

§ 9. An adverse possession to give title to an easement for a passageway across land must originate in a claim of right.—Sanford v. Kern (Mo.) 1051.

§ 9. A passageway across land held to be claimed adversely by the user.—Sanford v. Kern (Mo.) 1051.

§ 10. The granting of a right of way and its acceptance by proper authority and in a proper manner will be presumed from an uninterrupted adverse user for 15 years.—City of Louisville v. Tompkins (Ky.) 174.

§ 12. A contract to give an easement across land for a passageway held executed.—Sanford v. Kern (Mo.) 1051.

§ 12. The consideration for a passageway held adequate.—Sanford v. Kern (Mo.) 1051.

§ 12. A license for a passageway across land held not affected by the fact that the person giving the license was not the legal owner.—Sanford v. Kern (Mo.) 1051.

§ 18. Where there was no outlet to the public highway from land sold, the law implied a grant of a reasonable right of way from the remainder of the vendor's land to the vendee, and subsequent grantees of the vendor took subject to such right of way.—Roland v. O'Neal (Ky.) 827.

§ 26. A license to use a passageway across land held not revocable at the pleasure of the licensor.—Sanford v. Kern (Mo.) 1051.

§ 36. Evidence held sufficient to establish right to an easement.—Sanford v. Kern (Mo.) 1051.

II. EXTENT OF RIGHT, USE, AND OBSTRUCTION.

§ 48. Where a purchaser of land was entitled to a way of necessity over the vendor's land, if the vendor permitted the use of a certain way, he could not afterwards withdraw his permission.—Roland v. O'Neal (Ky.) 827.

IV. QUALIFICATIONS OF VOTERS.

§ 65. Under Act March 24, 1908 (Acts 1908, p. 133, c. 56), re-enacting as a part thereof Ky. St. 1909, §§ 4464-4500a (Russell's St. §§ 5736-5785), relating to graded common schools, women are no longer entitled to vote in graded common school elections.—Jeffries v. Board of Trustees of Columbia Graded Common School (Ky.) 813.

V. REGISTRATION OF VOTERS.

§ 95. The registration laws authorized by Const. art. 4, § 1, authorizing the General Assembly to enact laws to secure the freedom of elections and the purity of the ballot box, prescribe no qualifications of electors, but are to regulate the exercise of the elective franchise.—State v. Weaver (Tenn.) 465.

§ 96. Shannon's Code, §§ 1189, 1198, 1199, requiring registration of voters, held to apply to municipal elections in the town of Lonsdale, Knox county, though its charter (Laws 1907, p. 1048, c. 305) does not provide for registration.—State v. Weaver (Tenn.) 465.

§ 97. In view of Shannon's Code, § 1217, held, that a voter must register in the civil district, ward, or voting precinct where he offers to vote.—State v. Weaver (Tenn.) 465.

VII. BALLOTS.

§ 184. By analogy to Const. art. 4, § 28 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 185), a proposition submitted to a vote of the people for their adoption must be "single" as that word is defined in the law; the vote of the people on such a proposition being in the nature of a legislative act.—State ex rel. School Dist. of Memphis v. Gordon (Mo.) 1008.

§ 184. Where a proposition to borrow money is submitted to the people, the object to which the borrowed money is to be appropriated is an integral part of the proposition.—State ex rel. School Dist. of Memphis v. Gordon (Mo.) 1008.

§ 184. An entire subject of a statute within Const. art. 4, § 28 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 185), and by analogy the entire subject of a proposition to be submitted to a vote of the people may be composed of parts, and any part, by further refinement, may be composed of other parts.—State ex rel. School Dist. of Memphis v. Gordon (Mo.) 1008.

IX. COUNT OF VOTES, RETURNS, AND CANVASS.

Restraining issuance of certificate of election, see Injunction, § 80.

X. CONTESTS.

Determination by state senate as to election of members, see States, § 30.

§ 273. An election may be contested, not only by candidates for the office, but by the incumbent, or a contest could be raised by the court of its own motion.—Adcock v. Houk (Tenn.) 979.

§ 305. Under Kirby's Dig. §§ 1227, 1228, where appellee showed by the statement of facts in his motion to dismiss the appeal in an election contest that the contest had been finally determined by an adjudication of the Senate, the appeal will be dismissed.—Young v. Boles (Ark.) 496.

XI. VIOLATIONS OF ELECTION LAWS.

§ 311. Act March 4, 1891 (Laws 1891, pp. 48, 51, 52) §§ 38, 43, and 44, relating to eleclating to the same subject.—Campbell v. Samples (Ark.) 110.

§ 313. Voting at a municipal election without registration held to constitute a misdemeanor, under Code 1858, § 4596.—State v. Weaver (Tenn.) 465.

§ 328. An information charging one with fraudulently registering, held not required to allege that he was sworn when he made application for registration.—State v. Keating (Mo.) 699.

§ 328. In a prosecution for fraudulent registration, evidence that the name signed by defendant in the primary books on two occasions was slightly misspelled did not constitute a fatal variance.—State v. Exnicious (Mo.) 730.

§ 329. A witness, knowing the facts, could testify that there was a general registration on certain days, where defendant was charged to have illegally registered.—State v. Tiernan (Mo.) 728.

§ 329. Evidence held to sustain a conviction of fraudulent registration.—State v. Exnicious (Mo.) 730.

§ 329. The secretary of the board of election commissioners held competent to testify that there was a general registration of voters in St. Louis on September 15, 1908, when accused was charged with fraudulent registration.—State v. Exnicious (Mo.) 730.

ELIGIBILITY.

Of county school superintendent, see Schools and School Districts, § 46.

EMBEZZLEMENT.

§ 10. Where no fiduciary relation existed between prosecuting witness and defendant, the latter was not guilty of embezzlement.—Bryant v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 543.

EMINENT DOMAIN.

Public improvements by municipalities, see Municipal Corporations, §§ 284-568.

I. NATURE, EXTENT, AND DELEGATION OF POWER.

§ 10. Gen. Laws 1907, p. 23, c. 15, held not to apply to street railways.—Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Houston Electric Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 287.

§ 49. The homestead right of a minor in land can be taken by eminent domain.—Ancell v. Southern Illinois & Mo. Bridge Co. (Mo.) 709.

II. COMPENSATION.

(B) Taking or Injuring Property as Ground for Compensation.

§ 93. The owner of land sought to be condemned by a gas company for a pipe line held not entitled to add to the value of the property to be taken the damages from the supposed exhaustion of the gas reservoir under his property by the use which the gas company intends to make of its gas wells.—Calor Oil & Gas Co. v. Franzell (Ky.) 188.

§ 120. An electric street railway held not to be an additional servitude in a street, and that it could cross over the tracks of a steam railroad crossing the highway without complying with conditions other than those to which the general public is subject in traveling over the highway.—Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Houston Electric Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 287.

tain its tracks thereafter was admissible.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 849.

§ 136. The measure of compensation for the right to lay a pipe line along a railroad right of way across the owner's land held the fair market value of the property at a fair and voluntary sale.—Calor Oil & Gas Co. v. Franzell (Ky.) 188.

III. PROCEEDINGS TO TAKE PROPERTY AND ASSESS COMPENSATION.

Appellate jurisdiction as dependent on title to realty being involved, see Courts, § 231.

§ 203. In proceedings to condemn a right of way for a pipe line, evidence of the value of the land, based on any supposedly peculiar adaptability for pipe line purposes, held inadmissible.—Calor Oil & Gas Co. v. Franzell (Ky.) 188.

§ 203. Evidence that damage sustained by a railroad company from inability to lay a third track over a street crossing would be from $15,000 to $25,000 held properly rejected.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 849.

§ 205. A verdict allowing only nominal damages for the acquisition of a street crossing over a railroad right of way held not contrary to the evidence.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 849.

§ 238. On appeal in condemnation proceedings, the condemnor has the burden of proof, and is entitled to the concluding argument.—Calor Oil & Gas Co. v. Franzell (Ky.) 188.

§ 239. An order held to amount to a vacation of the report of commissioners in a condemnation proceeding within Rev. St. 1899, § 1268 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1040).—Southern Missouri & A. R. Co. v. Wyatt (Mo.) 688.

§ 239. Vacation of a commissioners' report in condemnation proceedings, under Rev. St. 1899, § 1268 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1040), held not a condition precedent to the award of a reassessment by jury.—Southern Missouri & A. R. Co. v. Wyatt (Mo.) 688.

§ 239. A general verdict allowing damages for the taking of two separate tracts for a railroad right of way held not erroneous on its face.—Southern Missouri & A. R. Co. v. Wyatt (Mo.) 688.

§ 262. A general verdict in condemnation proceedings allowing damages for two separate tracts of land held not to be presumed defective on appeal, for failure to make a separate award as to each, where such objection was not presented at the trial by motion in arrest of judgment, and there was no bill of exceptions.—Southern Missouri & A. R. Co. v. Wyatt (Mo.) 688.

§ 460. In an action to recover for a deficit in land sold, held, that the court could look to the negotiations leading up to the deed to determine the nature of the transaction.—Boggs v. Bush (Ky.) 220.

XII. OPINION EVIDENCE.

(A) Conclusions and Opinions of Witnesses in General.

§ 471. Testimony that plaintiff was weak of mind and had no appreciation of the value of money or property held not objectionable as being an opinion involving a legal conclusion.—Koppe v. Koppe (Tex. Civ. App.) 68.

§ 471. Testimony of witnesses that a plaintiff did not in their opinion have sufficient mental capacity to fully understand a transaction in question held inadmissible as involving a legal conclusion.—Koppe v. Koppe (Tex. Civ. App.) 68.

§ 471. In trespass to try title, testimony by an attorney that he investigated plaintiff's title, and declined to institute suit for recovery of the land, was immaterial and irrelevant, being a mere expression of opinion as to the validity of plaintiff's claim.—Merriman v. Bialack (Tex. Civ. App.) 403.

§ 471. Answers held not objectionable as witnesses' conclusions.—Merriman v. Bialack (Tex. Civ. App.) 403.

§ 471. Testimony of witness held to be a statement of a fact within his knowledge, and not merely a conclusion.—J. T. Stark Grain Co. v. Harry Bros. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 947.

§ 474. Persons who had observed and measured railway tracks with a yardstick or straight edge and a tape line could testify that one rail at a curve was an inch higher than the other, though they did not appear to be experts in such matters, and it was not shown that the measurements were made with a spirit level.—Gardner v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1068.

§ 477. A husband suing for a personal injury to his wife held authorized to testify, though not an expert, that his wife's limbs are paralyzed.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Sandlin (Tex. Civ. App.) 60.

§ 478. In an action to set aside a deed from plaintiff to his stepmother, certain evidence held admissible.—Koppe v. Koppe (Tex. Civ. App.) 68.

§ 501. In an action to set aside a deed as fraudulent, testimony of witnesses as to plaintiff's mental incapacity held not incompetent because the witnesses failed to state specifically the acts upon which their opinions were based.—Koppe v. Koppe (Tex. Civ. App.) 68.

(B) Subjects of Expert Testimony.

§ 512. While expert testimony is admissible to prove the character of treatment which should be given a patient, or the probable effect of the lack thereof, the opinion of an expert as to whether another physician should or should not have gone to a patient under particular circumstances is inadmissible.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Graves (Tex. Civ. App.) 458.

§ 513. In an action for death of a servant, where an issue is made as to whether an appliance alleged to have caused the death was reasonably safe, competent and experienced persons may, as experts, give their opinion based upon actual experience, observation, or technical knowledge, with their reasons therefor.—Warren's Adm'r v. Jeunesse (Ky.) 862.

§ 513. Whether it is feasible for a railroad to establish a grade crossing over its tracks at a particular place is a subject for expert testimony.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. City of Belton (Tex. Civ. App.) 413.

§ 513. In an action for breach of contracts to pay for an elevator building, tanks, etc., a witness of large experience in the construction of such structures could express an opinion that the building, etc., were constructed in accordance with the contracts.—J. T. Stark Grain Co. v. Harry Bros. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 947.

(C) Competency of Experts.

§ 539½. Motormen held competent to testify as to the distance in which a car could be stopped.—Batsch v. United Rys. Co. of St. Louis (Mo. App.) 371.

§ 190. Rev. St. 1899, § 185 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 399), held not to apply to the demand of a widow for a cash allowance in lieu of provisions for one year's support, as authorized by sections 105, 106 (pages 372, 373).—In re Ulrici's Estate (Mo. App.) 761.

§ 190. Limitations prescribed by Rev. St. 1899, § 4273 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2349), held not to begin to run against the demand of a widow for a cash allowance in lieu of provisions for one year's support, until letters of administration have been granted.—In re Ulrici's Estate (Mo. App.) 761.

§ 190. A widow seeking a cash payment in lieu of an allowance for provisions held not guilty of laches.—In re Ulrici's Estate (Mo. App.) 761.

VI. ALLOWANCE AND PAYMENT OF CLAIMS.(A) Liabilities of Estate.

§ 221. Services between persons in family relation are presumed to be gratuitous.—Rose v. Mayes (Mo. App.) 769.

§ 221. An intention to charge and to pay for services between persons in family relation may be proved by circumstantial evidence.—Rose v. Mayes (Mo. App.) 769.

§ 221. Evidence in support of a mother's claim for services against the estate of her deceased daughter examined, and held to justify the direction of a verdict for the administrator.—Rose v. Mayes (Mo. App.) 769.

(B) Presentation and Allowance.

§ 227. An affidavit of a nonresident corporation claimant against the estate of a decedent held insufficient in view of Ky. St. § 3870 (Russell's St. § 3901), and Civ. Code Prac. §§ 117, 544, 549, subsec. 2, 550, subsec. 1.—Crane & Breed Mfg. Co. v. Stagg's Adm'r (Ky.) 225.

§ 227. An affidavit of a claimant against a decedent's estate held insufficient under Ky. St. § 3871 (Russell's St. § 3902).—Crane & Breed Mfg. Co. v. Stagg's Adm'r (Ky.) 225.

§ 227. An affidavit of a claimant against a decedent's estate made by the claimant's employe held insufficient under Ky. St. § 3870 (Russell's St. § 3901).—Crane & Breed Mfg. Co. v. Stagg's Adm'r (Ky.) 225.

§ 237. A judgment establishing a claim against the estate of a deceased widow held res judicata in proceedings to charge the estate of the deceased husband, leaving a will disposing of his property after the payment of the widow's debts.—Pierce v. Pierce (Mo. App.) 1147.

VIII. SALES AND CONVEYANCES UNDER ORDER OF COURT.(B) Application and Order.

§ 356. Where, at the time judgment was rendered directing land to be sold for a decedent's debts in a suit by a creditor, a cross-petitioner's petition alleging his ownership of the land and praying that title be adjudged in him was on file before the court, the judgment necessarily adjudged that cross-petitioner had no title, though his name was not mentioned therein.—Little v. Cardwell (Ky.) 799.

(C) Sale.

§ 375. An order for the sale of land belonging to the estate of a decedent held defective, and that the court could not amend the order approving the sale by an order nunc pro tunc.—Bouldin v. Jennings (Ark.) 639.

IX. INSOLVENT ESTATES.

Rights of administrator of insolvent as to homestead, see Homestead, § 153.

X. ACTIONS.

§ 431. A suit by a creditor to compel an administrator to settle the estate under Civ. Code Prac. § 428, and to compel payment of debts, held improperly dismissed because of plaintiff's failure to present his claim accompanied by affidavits verified, as required by statute.—Crane & Breed Mfg. Co. v. Stagg's Adm'r (Ky.) 225.

§ 431. 1 Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 2082, held not to require the presentation to and rejection by the executor of an unliquidated claim for services against the estate, before suing thereon.—Wells v. Hobbs (Tex. Civ. App.) 451.

XI. ACCOUNTING AND SETTLEMENT.(E) Stating, Settling, Opening, and Review.

§ 513. Under the Constitution and Kirby's Dig. § 140, a judgment of the probate court confirming the final settlement of an administrator held to terminate the jurisdiction of the probate court notwithstanding section 46.—Beckett v. Whittington (Ark.) 633.

§ 516. A court of chancery held authorized on a proper showing to set aside an order of the probate court confirming the final settlement of the administrator, and permit the heir, distributee, or creditor to recover assets.—Beckett v. Whittington (Ark.) 633.

FIXTURES.

§ 4. The principal criterion for determining whether an article became a fixture is the owner's intention in putting the material in or on the land or building—whether his purpose was to make it permanently a part thereof.—Banner Iron Works v. Aetna Iron Works (Mo. App.) 762.

§ 4. If the owner of land or building purposed in putting an article in or on the same to make it permanently a part thereof, it will usually be treated as a fixture and lienable, though it is fastened only slightly and may be displaced without injuring the freehold.—Banner Iron Works v. Aetna Iron Works (Mo. App.) 762.

§ 4. In ascertaining the intention to make machinery or other articles permanently a part of a factory building, adaptability to the work or business is important, and if necessary thereto, or to the purpose for which the building was designed and used, or a convenient accessory, or commonly employed, intention to annex permanently may be inferred.—Banner Iron Works v. Aetna Iron Works (Mo. App.) 762.

§ 7. Whether an article became a fixture is not determinable altogether, or even principally, by the mode of its attachment, and whether that is slight or strong, or whether the article can be removed readily without damage to the freehold, though these circumstances are to be considered.—Banner Iron Works v. Aetna Iron Works (Mo. App.) 762.

I. DECEPTION CONSTITUTING FRAUD, AND LIABILITY THEREFOR.

§ 25. A vendor fraudulently induced to accept a reconveyance in satisfaction of the vendor's lien notes cannot recover for the fraud in the absence of a showing that injury resulted.—Thouren v. Skirvin (Tex. Civ. App.) 53.

II. ACTIONS.(C) Evidence.

§ 56. Evidence held admissible on the question whether one was deceived by false representations.—Goldman v. Hadley (Tex. Civ. App.) 282.

§ 58. Fraud need not be shown by direct evidence, but may be proved by circumstances.—Russell v. Brooks (Ark.) 649.

(D) Damages.

§ 59. In an action for deceit in exchange of property, the measure of damages was the difference between the actual value of the land received and what it would have been worth had it been as represented.—Hawman v. McLean (Mo. App.) 1094.

§ 59. A vendor fraudulently induced to accept a reconveyance in satisfaction of the vendor's lien notes cannot keep the property and recover the amount of the notes as damages for the fraud.—Thouren v. Skirvin (Tex. Civ. App.) 55.

§ 60. Attorney's fees are not recoverable as actual damages in a suit for depriving one of his property by fraud.—Thouren v. Skirvin (Tex. Civ. App.) 55.

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.VI. REAL PROPERTY AND ESTATES AND INTERESTS THEREIN.

§ 63. An oral agreement by the grantee to reconvey land to the grantor held void under the statute of frauds (Rev. St. 1899, § 3416 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 1949]).—Shelton v. Cooksey (Mo. App.) 331.

§ 70. A verbal agreement between adjoining landowners fixing the boundaries so as to avoid litigation is not within the statute of frauds.—Walker v. Cornett (Ky.) 841.

§ 73. A contract held not one for sale of land within the statute of frauds.—Parriss v. Jewell (Tex. Civ. App.) 399.

VIII. REQUISITES AND SUFFICIENCY OF WRITING.

§ 116. While authority to convey land must be given by an instrument of equal dignity with the deed, authority to contract to convey may be given verbally.—Davis & Rhea v. Spann (Ark.) 495.

IX. OPERATION AND EFFECT OF STATUTE.

§ 140. Though a contract is required by statute to be in writing, it may be rescinded by parol.—Keeney v. Waters (Ky.) 837.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.I. TRANSFERS AND TRANSACTIONS INVALID.*(C) Property and Rights Transferred.

§ 52. A voluntary conveyance by a debtor of his homestead is not fraudulent as against his creditors, in the absence of any statutory prohibition.—Seilert v. McAnally (Mo.) 1064.

(J) Knowledge and Intent of Grantee.

§ 158. Mere inadequacy of price held not sufficient to put a purchaser on inquiry or to invalidate the sale, but a grossly inadequate price is evidence affecting the purchaser's good faith.—Beebe Stave Co. v. Austin (Ark.) 482.

III. REMEDIES OF CREDITORS AND PURCHASERS.

(G) Evidence.

§ 282. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 3399 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1933), a subsequent purchaser seeking to set aside a prior voluntary conveyance of his grantor to his wife held required to show that the wife participated in the grantor's fraud.—Seilert v. McNally (Mo.) 1064.

§ 290. In an action to set aside deeds as in fraud of creditors, evidence held to show that one of the deeds conveyed a lot as security for money advanced by the grantee, which was paid to the creditors on the judgment, so that the grantee had a lien on the lot for that sum and interest prior to the creditors' claim.—Akers v. Nicholson (Ky.) 805.

FRIGHT.

Frightening animals on or near railroad track, see Railroads, § 300.

GAMING.

III. CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY.

(B) Prosecution and Punishment.

Of dividends by corporation, see Corporations, § 155.

GUARDIAN AND WARD.

III. CUSTODY AND CARE OF WARD'S PERSON AND ESTATE.

§ 34. The property of a ward is not vested in the guardian; but, in the absence of an express trust, the title thereto remains in the ward, and his title cannot be disturbed without his being a party to the suit involving the issue.—Seilert v. McNally (Mo.) 1064.

IV. SALES AND CONVEYANCES UNDER ORDER OF COURT.

Lack of corporate power to purchase as ground for vacation of sale, see Corporations, § 388.

§ 79. The homestead right of minors in land of their deceased father is "real estate" within the meaning of Rev. St. 1899, §§ 3504, 3510 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 2000, 2002).—Ancell v. Southern Illinois & M. Bridge Co. (Mo.) 709.

§ 84. There is no presumption of law that a guardian is so interested personally in a proceeding to sell the ward's real estate that a guardian ad litem should be appointed to represent the minor.—Ancell v. Southern Illinois & M. Bridge Co. (Mo.) 709.

§ 87. No notice of the guardian's application to sell a minor's real estate for his maintenance and education need be given to the minor under Rev. St. 1899, § 3505 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2000).—Ancell v. Southern Illinois & M. Bridge Co. (Mo.) 709.

§ 88. That the order of sale of a minor's land was made the same day the petition therefor was filed by the guardian held an irregularity which did not invalidate the sale; Rev. St. 1899, §§ 148, 3505 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 386, 2000), not applying to guardian's sales so as to require the sale to be made at the next term of court.—Ancell v. Southern Illinois & M. Bridge Co. (Mo.) 709.

§ 105. Since the probate court had jurisdiction of the sale of a ward's real estate for his maintenance, etc., the sufficiency of the guardian's petition for the sale was for it to determine, and its action in approving the petition cannot be reviewed in absence of fraud.—Ancell v. Southern Illinois & M. Bridge Co. (Mo.) 709.

§ 105. A sale of a ward's land will not be declared invalid because the appraisers could not remember years afterward, upon testifying in proceedings to set aside the sale, of having appraised the land.—Ancell v. Southern Illinois & M. Bridge Co. (Mo.) 709.

V. ACTIONS.

§ 126. In a suit to divest title to real estate out of an infant and to vest it in plaintiff, the infant must be sued in his own name, and his guardian must defend the action.—Sellert v. McAnally (Mo.) 1064.

HABEAS CORPUS.

I. NATURE AND GROUNDS OF REMEDY.

§ 30. A writ of habeas corpus cannot be invoked to question a judgment merely erroneous, and not absolutely void.—Ex parte Cassens (Tex. Cr. App.) 888, 891.

§ 30. In a prosecution for selling liquors to a minor, a decision of the court having jurisdiction whether the law on which the prosecution was based had been superseded held at most erroneous, and not reviewable on habeas corpus.—Ex parte Cassens (Tex. Cr. App.) 888, 891.

II. JURISDICTION, PROCEEDINGS, AND RELIEF.

§ 100. A court held to have no power in habeas corpus proceedings, either under or without. Rev. St. 1899, §§ 2720, 3615 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 1596, 2033) to enter, in place of the original judgment imposing imprisonment, one imposing a fine.—Ex parte Cornwall (Mo.) 666.

(B) Establishment by Statute or Statutory Proceedings.

§ 19. Act No. 247, p. 568, Acts 1907, authorizing the forming of road improvement districts in Jefferson county, held not violative of Const. art. 7, § 28.—Parkview Land Co. v. Road Improvement Dist. No. 1 of Jefferson County (Ark.) 241.

§ 29. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 9414 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4327), the petition for a new road held to confer jurisdiction on the county court to find that the petition is accompanied by the list of the landowners required by the statute.—Halter v. Leonard (Mo.) 706.

§ 53. A road held not illegal because of a variance between the calls of the order directing it to be laid out and the report of the jury of view.—Cator v. Hays (Tex. Civ. App.) 953.

§ 63. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 9414 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4327), the judgment of the county court on the petition for a new road held not open to collateral attack.—Halter v. Leonard (Mo.) 706.

II. HIGHWAY DISTRICTS AND OFFICERS.

Partial invalidity of statute relating to formation of districts, see Statutes, § 64.

III. CONSTRUCTION, IMPROVEMENT, AND REPAIR.

§ 120. An abutting landowner held not entitled to change the position of a public road without complying with Rev. St. 1899, § 9414 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4327), requiring that application for the change of roads shall be made by petition to the county court.—Williams v. Beatty (Mo. App.) 323.

§ 120. The owner of land threatened with danger from the alteration of a road and drainage ditch held entitled to an injunction.—Williams v. Beatty (Mo. App.) 323.

§ 120. Right of a party threatened with injury from the alteration of a road and drainage ditch held not precluded by an instrument from his grantor to the other party granting permission to construct a drainage ditch through the grantor's land.—Williams v. Beatty (Mo. App.) 323.

Rights of minor as subject to taking under power of eminent domain, see Eminent Domain, § 49.

§ 135. Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 2055, held unconstitutional in so far as it attempted to give a widow and remaining constituents of the family the absolute title to a homestead of the husband's set apart to them under article 2046.—Dorman v. Grace (Tex. Civ. App.) 401.

§ 142. Under Const. art. 9, § 6, the widow and minor children entitled to the homestead during the life of the widow and during the minority of the children held not entitled to open on the land new mines and to mine and sell mineral therefrom or to lease the same to others for that purpose.—Cherokee Const. Co. v. Harris (Ark.) 485.

§ 143. Under Const. art. 9, §§ 6, 10, a sale of the homestead by the surviving mother held void as against minor children.—Smith v. Scott (Ark.) 501.

§ 153. Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, arts. 2046, 2055, 2060, a homestead passing to a widow as the only remaining constituent of the family held not to be taken as assets by an administrator of the deceased husband.—Dorman v. Grace (Tex. Civ. App.) 401.

§ 153. A contention that it would be inequitable for collateral heirs of a husband, on death of the wife, to claim that the wife took absolute title as against creditors of an estate, held of no avail.—Dorman v. Grace (Tex. Civ. App.) 401.

IV. ABANDONMENT, WAIVER, OR FORFEITURE.

§ 164. The entry on government land held not to constitute an abandonment of a homestead.—Kimberlin v. Gordon (Mo. App.) 1144.

HOMICIDE.

II. MURDER.

§ 22. Premeditation and deliberation held essential elements of murder in the first degree defined by Kirby's Dig. § 1766.—Ferguson v. State (Ark.) 236.

III. MANSLAUGHTER.

§ 63. Blows inflicted on decedent by accused held the cause of decedent's death, authorizing the conviction of involuntary manslaughter.—Gilmore v. State (Ark.) 493.

IV. ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL.

§ 86. If accused placed a child to which his sister-in-law had just given birth in an exposed position near his house, without any intent to kill it, but to hide his sister-in-law's shame and his own paternity of it until it could be carried away, he would not be guilty of assault to murder, but of some lesser degree, if of anything.—Martin v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 558.

§ 96. The jury, in considering whether one charged with assault with intent to kill acted in self-defense, held required to consider all the facts shown by the evidence.—Derrick v. State (Ark.) 506.

V. EXCUSABLE OR JUSTIFIABLE HOMICIDE.

§ 105. While an officer authorized to arrest for a misdemeanor may use such force as is necessary to overcome the resistance, he may not, if the resistance is not forcible, wantonly shoot or injure the person arrested.—Commonwealth v. Marcum (Ky.) 215.

§ 112. A certain remark held not justification for an assault, but only to be considered as mitigation of the offense.—Griffin v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 553.

§ 116. Accused held entitled to defend himself against an assault, and to use such force as reasonably appeared to him necessary at the time.—Gilmore v. State (Ark.) 493.

§ 119. A person, committing a homicide under certain circumstances, held justified in self-defense.—State v. Linn (Mo.) 679.

§ 122. If a person believed that another was going to assault the person's brother, such person could defend his brother to the extent that the brother could defend himself.—Griffin v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 553.

VI. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION.

§ 127. An information held to sufficiently charge murder in the first degree.—State v. Shelton (Mo.) 732.

§ 135. An information charging murder held sufficiently to allege that the mortal wound was inflicted with the knife alleged to have been used.—State v. Linn (Mo.) 679.

VII. EVIDENCE.

(A) Presumptions and Burden of Proof.

§ 147. It is not necessary that the intention to kill be conceived for any particular period of time to constitute murder in the first degree.—Ferguson v. State (Ark.) 236.

§ 152. Under Kirby's Dig. §§ 1766, 1767, where the fact of killing alone is proved, it will be presumed that the crime is murder in the second degree.—Ferguson v. State (Ark.) 236.

§ 152. Presumption as to premeditation from fact of death.—Ferguson v. State (Ark.) 236.

(B) Admissibility in General.

Demonstrative evidence, see Criminal Law, § 404.

§ 166. It is not improper to supplement evidence indicating that robbery was the motive for a killing, with proof that deceased usually had money in his possession.—State v. Shelton (Mo.) 732.

§ 171. Where it was shown that the body of decedent, when seen, by a witness, had been practically undisturbed, it was not error to permit the witness to prove the position of the body.—Welch v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 880.

(C) Dying Declarations.

§ 214. The state held entitled to show a certain statement of decedent as a part of his dying declarations.—Craft v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 547.

(E) Weight and Sufficiency.

§ 234. Evidence held not to support a conviction of murder.—Southern v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 259.

§ 235. On a trial for murdering a child by setting fire to the house in which the child dwelt, evidence held not to support a conviction.—Sprouse v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 134.

§ 253. In a prosecution for homicide, evidence held to sustain a verdict of murder in the first degree.—Ferguson v. State (Ark.) 236.

§ 253. Evidence held sufficient to justify a conviction of murder in the first degree.—State v. Wilson (Mo.) 671.

§ 253. Evidence held sufficient to support a verdict convicting of murder in the first degree in a case wherein the conviction rested largely on testimony of an accomplice.—State v. Shelton (Mo.) 732.

§ 254. Evidence held to justify a conviction of murder in the second degree.—Welch v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 890.

§ 300. Instruction as to self-defense held to place an improper limitation on defendant's rights by the words "on a peaceable mission."—McCleary v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 26.

§ 300. Held error to refuse a charge on self-defense.—Griffin v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 553.

§ 309. Instructions on manslaughter held proper under the evidence.—Gilmore v. State (Ark.) 493.

§ 310. In a prosecution for assault to murder a child to which accused's sister-in-law gave birth at his house, which was found some distance therefrom, his sister-in-law claiming that accused was its father, evidence held to require a charge on the theory that the child was put where it was found without any intent to kill it, to prevent the exposure of his sister-in-law's shame and his connection with its paternity.—Martin v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 553.

X. APPEAL AND ERROR.

§ 339. The exclusion of cumulative evidence to show ill will and threats toward deceased by a third person does not require a reversal.—Spencer v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 800.

§ 341. Failure of the court to more fully define manslaughter held not reversible error.—State v. Linn (Mo.) 679.

§ 341. The jury having been required to find every essential element of murder in the first degree, and having found defendant guilty thereof, and fixed his punishment pursuant to Act March 18, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 235, § 1), amending section 1817, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1262), providing for decision by the jury of the punishment to be inflicted, defendant was not injured by the court's failure to designate the punishment they might inflict.—State v. Shelton (Mo.) 732.

III. LOCAL OPTION.

§ 33. If notice of a local option election, which need only be published in one paper, be published in more than one, it must be published in each for the full time.—State ex rel. Doran v. Johnson County Court (Mo. App.) 316.

§ 33. If the last day of publication of notice of a local option election be the day after the election, it cannot be counted in determining the time.—State ex rel. Doran v. Johnson County Court (Mo. App.) 316.

§ 33. Evidence held to show that the day of publication of a paper containing notice of a local option election was the date on which it purported to be actually published.—State ex rel. Doran v. Johnson County Court (Mo. App.) 316.

§ 33. Where two papers are designated to publish a notice, proper publication only in the one designated as the official paper is insufficient.—State ex rel. Doran v. Johnson County Court (Mo. App.) 316.

§ 33. Whether an order for publication of a notice is for "four full consecutive weeks" or for "four consecutive weeks," the time required is the same.—State ex rel. Doran v. Johnson County Court (Mo. App.) 316.

§ 33. The findings of the county court relating to a local option election, under Rev. St. 1899, § 3027 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1733), held not to be attacked on mandamus to compel the issuance of a liquor license pursuant to section 2993 (page 1717).—State ex rel. Ryan v. Wooten (Mo. App.) 1101.

§ 33. The findings of the county court relating to a local option election is conclusive on any appellate court, on collateral attack by mandamus.—State ex rel. Ryan v. Wooten (Mo. App.) 1101.

§ 36. The court, on a trial for a violation of the local option law, held required to assume that the election putting the law in force was valid, where there was no contest, as provided by Acts 30th Leg. 1907, p. 447, c. 8.—Weasley v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 550.

§ 40. Under the Cammack act (Act March 14, 1906 [Acts 1906, p. 86, c. 21]), relating to local option election, the county is the absolute unit except in counties in which a city of the first, second, third, or fourth class is situated, and in such counties the territory outside of such city is an absolute unit, and the city is a separate unit.—May v. Ferguson (Ky.) 208.

§ 40. Where prohibition has been established in an entire county under the Cammack act (Act March 14, 1906 [Acts 1906, p. 86, c. 21]), a vote cannot be taken in any subdivision of the county other than in a city of a designated class unless it is taken in the entire county.—May v. Ferguson (Ky.) 208.

§ 40. A person can be convicted of giving intoxicating liquors to a minor, regardless of whether the local option law was in force in the county.—Ex parte Cassens (Tex. Cr. App.) 888, 891.

IV. LICENSES AND TAXES.

§ 61. A county clerk held not liable on his bond for wrongful refusal to issue a state liquor license to one presenting a license from a city with the proper fee.—Commonwealth v. Blackburn (Ky.) 818.

§ 69. It is the county court's mandatory duty to grant a liquor license on a petition signed by two-thirds of the qualified petitioners in a block as required by law.—State ex rel. Doran v. Johnson County Court (Mo. App.) 316.

§ 69. Rev. St. 1899, § 2903 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1717), relating to the granting of liquor licenses, held mandatory.—State ex rel. Ryan v. Wooten (Mo. App.) 1101.

§ 71. The judgment of the county court, rejecting an application for license to sell liquor, under Ky. St. 1909, § 4205 (Russell's St. § 6147), held a bar to a renewal of the application within a year.—Commonwealth v. Schoenthaler (Ky.) 828.

§ 71. Evidence held to show one was not entitled to a liquor license, under Ky. St. 1909, § 4205 (Russell's St. § 6147), as a merchant.—Commonwealth v. Ewing (Ky.) 851.

VI. OFFENSES.

§ 134. Ky. St. 1909, § 2557 (Russell's St. § 3635), held not violated by sale in prohibited local option territory of nonintoxicating malt liquor.—City of Bowling Green v. McMullen (Ky.) 823; Same v. Barrone (Ky.) 825; Same v. McIner, Id.; Same v. Higgins, Id.

§ 163. An innkeeper by serving liquor with Sunday meals held to violate Ky. St. §§ 1303, 1304 (Russell's St. §§ 3630, 3631).—Seelbach Hotel Co. v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 190.

§ 223. A person can be convicted of giving intoxicating liquors to a minor on a complaint charging the selling and giving of such liquors.—Ex parte Cassens (Tex. Cr. App.) 888, 891.

§ 226. Evidence in a prosecution for violating the local option law held inadmissible.—Haney v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 34.

§ 231. On a trial for selling intoxicating liquor, evidence of a witness as to the nonintoxicating quality of the liquor held admissible.—Martin v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 24.

§ 233. Evidence that the proprietor of the drug store where the alleged sale of liquor was made had employed the accused to haul away empty bottles held inadmissible.—Hankins v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 21.

§ 235. On a trial for violating the local option law, the court properly permitted the state to show that a witness had recently purchased whisky, none of which he had sold.—Wesley v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 550.

§ 236. Evidence held sufficient to justify a conviction for violating the local option law.—Gee v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 23.

§ 239. On a trial for selling intoxicating liquors on election day, the evidence held to raise the question of honest mistake of fact on the part of accused.—Martin v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 24.

§ 239. On an indictment, under Pen. Code 1895, art. 400, for selling or giving liquor to a minor, an instruction that, if accused "was instrumental or in any way concerned" in the giving of liquor to a minor, etc., he should be convicted, being within the broader terms of Acts 30th Leg. 1907, p. 216, c. 116, was erroneous.—Walker v. State (Tex., Cr. App.) 395.

§ 239. On a trial for violating the local option law, the jury held sufficiently charged that local option was in force.—Matthews v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 544.

(B) Assignment, Subletting, and Mortgage.

Restraining acts by sub-lessee in violation of original lease, see Injunction, § 62.

(D) Termination.

§ 108. A lessee could not waive, in favor of a sublessee, a stipulation in the original lease against the selling of intoxicating liquors on the premises and providing for a forfeiture for violation of such stipulation.—Ft. Worth Driving Club v. Ft. Worth Fair Ass'n (Tex.) 254.

VII. PREMISES AND ENJOYMENT AND USE THEREOF.

(B) Possession, Enjoyment, and Use.

§ 129. Measure of damages for failure of a landlord to furnish a part of the ground to the tenant which he has leased to him, stated.—Pressler v. Warren (Tex. Civ. App.) 909.

§ 129. In an action against the landlord for failure to give the tenant possession of all the land leased, evidence as to the value of the crop raised on the land furnished held admissible.—Pressler v. Warren (Tex. Civ. App.) 909.

(F) Eviction.

Wrongful conversion of property of tenant on eviction, see Trover and Conversion, § 4.

§ 180. A tenant from month to month held not entitled to possession and to recover damages for an eviction after termination of his lease by default in rent.—Wilson v. Moore (Tex. Civ. App.) 577.

§ 180. In a suit for wrongful eviction and conversion of a tenant's property, evidence held insufficient to justify the direction of a verdict for plaintiff.—Wilson v. Moore (Tex. Civ. App.) 577.

§ 180. Where, in a suit for wrongful eviction, the undisputed testimony showed the value of the use of the premises did not exceed the amount of rent to be paid, plaintiff failed to show damage.—Wilson v. Moore (Tex. Civ. App.) 577.

VIII. RENT AND ADVANCES.

(A) Rights and Liabilities.

§ 207. Evidence held to show that a corporation, and not its president, was a tenant, relieving the president from personal liability for the rent.—Keinstra v. King (Mo. App.) 337.

I. OFFENSES AND RESPONSIBILITY THEREFOR.

§ 3. If accused took a pistol dropped by a policeman while attempting to arrest him only to disarm him, he was not guilty of larceny.—Bailey v. State (Ark.) 497.

§ 3. An intent to steal is an essential element of larceny.—Bailey v. State (Ark.) 497.

§ 3. A criminal intent is the principal element of the offense of larceny.—State v. Claybaugh (Mo. App.) 319.

§ 3. One who, in good faith and under color of a rightful claim, converts to his own use the property of another, is not guilty of theft.—State v. Claybaugh (Mo. App.) 319.

§ 7. A joint owner of cotton in the open boll held not to have severed his relation to the cotton, so as to be convicted of theft of it.—Gipson v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 557.

§ 12. Accused, if not engaged in the original taking of property, held liable only for receiving stolen property.—Lee v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 389.

§ 15. The buyer of personalty on conditional sale acquires an interest therein which he may sell or mortgage, and is not a bailee within Kirby's Dig. § 1839, making it larceny for a bailee to convert to his own use property placed in his custody.—Settles v. State (Ark.) 500.

§ 23. In a prosecution for robbery, held error not to have instructed on petit larceny.—Wynn v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 516.

§ 23. Where different articles are alleged to have been stolen at different times, and the value is affixed to each separate article, the evidence must show a taking of articles of the value of $50 or over at one time, in order to sustain a conviction under Pen. Code 1895, art. 869.—Johnson v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 877.

§ 27. Accused, under certain circumstances, held not guilty of cattle theft as a principal.—Jones v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 31.

II. PROSECUTION AND PUNISHMENT.

(A) Indictment and Information.

§ 32. An information held insufficient to charge larceny.—State v. Clark (Mo.) 665.

§ 40. Where punishment is fixed for theft of a particular kind of property, it is unnecessary to allege or prove the value; but it is otherwise as to all other classes of property.—Johnson v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 877.

(B) Evidence.

Identity of accused under habitual criminal statute, see Criminal Law, § 1204.

§ 44. In a prosecution for stealing a pistol dropped by a policeman while attempting to arrest accused, who claimed that he took it merely to disarm the policeman, evidence that the policeman had repeatedly threatened to kill accused was admissible.—Bailey v. State (Ark.) 497.

§ 52. In a prosecution for theft of a mower, accused claiming that he bought it from others, and paid part down, and subsequently paid the remaining 25 cents, could show that he paid the money for the mower, so that evidence that he stated at the time what he paid the 25 cents for was admissible.—White v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 391.

§ 55. Evidence held to support a conviction of larceny.—State v. Hubbard (Mo.) 694.

§ 55. Evidence held sufficient to sustain a conviction for theft of hogs.—Carr v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 258.

§ 59. Evidence held to sustain a conviction of theft of personal property over the value of $50.—Cabral v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 872.

(C) Trial and Review.

§ 68. In a prosecution for larceny in taking a pistol which a policeman dropped, whether accused took the pistol merely to disarm the policeman held for the jury.—Bailey v. State (Ark.) 497.

§ 68. In a trial for larceny, where accused claims ownership of the property, and there is no substantial evidence of criminal intent, the court should not send the case to the jury.—State v. Claybaugh (Mo. App.) 319.

§ 68. In a trial for larceny, evidence of a criminal intent held insufficient to warrant the submission of the case to the jury.—State v. Claybaugh (Mo. App.) 319.

§ 70. Where accused was prosecuted under an indictment charging the committing of cattle theft as a principal, he was entitled to a clear-cut charge that if he was not a principal under the statute he should be acquitted, and that the fact that he was an accomplice, or a receiver of the stolen animal, would not authorize his conviction.—Jones v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 31.

§ 71. In a prosecution for stealing a pistol from a policeman, held, that the court should have instructed that, if accused took the pistol to disarm the policeman they should acquit; a general instruction authorizing conviction upon belief beyond a reasonable doubt that accused took the pistol with intent to steal being insufficient.—Bailey v. State (Ark.) 497.

§ 72. Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 869, a charge failing to require the jury to find the value of the property alleged to have been taken held erroneous.—Johnson v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 877.

§ 73. An indictment for theft must aver possession of the property stolen, and that it was taken from the possession of the owner or person holding for him, and in submitting that issue it must be substantially in the terms of the indictment.—Eubanks v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 35.

§ 73. A portion of a charge submitting the issue of the owner's possession of stolen sacks held to be defective, in that the jury were not required to find that the property was taken from the possession of the person as laid in the indictment.—Eubanks v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 35.

§ 77. Where an issue of theft was raised by the state's case, and defendant admitted manual taking, but claimed it was under circumstances not imputing crime, but in pursuance of purchase, held, that it was error to submit the issue of voluntary return of stolen property.—Eubanks v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 35.

LIBEL AND SLANDER.

I. WORDS AND ACTS ACTIONABLE, AND LIABILITY THEREFOR.

§ 5. Where words spoken are slanderous per se, it is presumed that they were spoken maliciously, in the absence of evidence tending to show the contrary.—Mayo v. Goldman (Tex. Civ. App.) 449.

§§ 9, 10. Words affecting one injuriously in his office, profession, or occupation are actionable per se.—Mayo v. Goldman (Tex. Civ. App.) 449.

§ 10. To falsely impute to a clerk that he has been bribed to betray the confidence of his employer is per se slanderous.—Mayo v. Goldman (Tex. Civ. App.) 449.

III. JUSTIFICATION AND MITIGATION.

§ 54. Under Gen. Laws 1901, p. 30, c. 26, the defense of truth pleaded and proved in libel held to be a complete defense, though the statements complained of were libelous per se.—Wheless v. W. Y. Davis & Son (Tex. Civ. App.) 929.

§ 54. In libel, evidence held to prove the truth of the statements complained of.—Wheless v. W. Y. Davis & Son (Tex. Civ. App.) 929.

IV. ACTIONS.

(A) Right of Action and Defenses.

Liability of partner for slanderous statement by co-partner, see Partnership, § 153.

(D) Damages.

§ 114. When words spoken are slanderous per se because imputing a crime or tending to injuriously affect complainant in his business, trade, or calling, he is entitled to at least nominal damages, if the speaking is not privileged, and the imputation conveyed is false.—Mayo v. Goldman (Tex. Civ. App.) 449.

§ 118. In an action for slander, plaintiff held not entitled to damages because of his loss of employment in the company of which defendant was manager.—Mayo v. Goldman (Tex. Civ. App.) 449.

(E) Trial, Judgment, and Review.

§ 123. In libel, a peremptory instruction for defendant held proper, in view of the evidence.—Wheless v. W. Y. Davis & Son (Tex. Civ. App.) 929.

§ 124. In an action for slander, where there was no evidence tending to show that the words as charged were used jocularly or otherwise innocently, and were not intended to convey the imputation claimed for them, the court should in charging the jury have assumed that the words, if spoken at all, were spoken maliciously.—Mayo v. Goldman (Tex. Civ. App.) 449.

VI. CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY.

(A) Offenses.

§ 148. In a prosecution for criminal libel, defendant held to have the right to inquire, of a third person, as to his knowledge of the unfitness and incompetency of an officer, and to ask the assistance of the third person in procuring the impeachment of the officer.—Yancey v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 123.

§ 148. In a prosecution for criminal libel, defendant, who had circulated a petition for impeachment, as provided by Ky. St. 1909, § 2172 (Russell's St. § 172), held to be acting within the scope of his duty as an officer and good citizen.—Yancey v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 123.

§ 148. The right conferred by Ky. St. 1909, § 2172 (Russell's St. § 172), to file the affidavits of other persons in proceedings for the impeachment of an officer necessarily carries with it the right to make reasonable and proper inquiry to obtain them.—Yancey v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 123.

§ 148. An impeachment proceeding is a judicial proceeding, and petitions, affidavits, or pleas which may properly be used therein are, as to their statements of fact, as much privileged as other writings or pleadings prepared for use or filed in the course of ordinary litigation.—Yancey v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 123.

I. STATUTES OF LIMITATION.

(A) Nature, Validity, and Construction in General.

§ 5. Statutes of limitations, being enacted to protect litigants from the infirmities of memory as well as to end litigation, are based upon sound public policy, and should be construed so as to effectuate the legislative intent.—Rutter v. Carothers (Mo.) 1056.

§ 11. Limitations run against a county, and in favor of one in adverse possession of its swamp lands.—Nall v. Conover (Mo.) 1039.

(B) Limitations Applicable to Particular Actions.

§ 28. An action to enforce an undertaking to support and care for a minor assumed by one accepting property under a will held to be governed by the five-year limitation of Ky. St. § 2515 (Russell's St. § 224), as to contracts not in writing.—Low v. Ramsey (Ky.) 167.

§ 39. An equitable action to correct mistakes in field notes in deeds to a party's predecessors in title would be barred by four years' limitations under Rev. St. 1895, art. 3358.—William Carlisle & Co. v. King (Tex. Civ. App.) 581.

II. COMPUTATION OF PERIOD OF LIMITATION.

(A) Accrual of Right of Action or Defense.

§ 44. Limitations with which adult heirs must sue for the possession of the homestead held not to begin to run until the minor heir has reached full age.—Smith v. Scott (Ark.) 501.

§ 47. An action on a vendor's covenant to convey a fee-simple title held not barred by 10 years' limitation.—Pineland Mfg. Co. v. Guardian Trust Co. (Mo. App.) 1133.

§ 55. The rule that, where an injury to real estate results from the construction of a permanent structure, the cause of action accrues on the completion of the structure, held not applicable to an action for damages to land from the overflow of a stream, the channel of which was changed by the construction of a railroad.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Haynes (Ky.) 210.

(C) Personal Disabilities and Privileges.

§ 72. Where an infant was entitled under a will to support and maintenance by a devisee till she reached the age of 15, her cause of action thereunder to enforce a lien on the land first accrued when the devisee failed to furnish her support, and her full cause of action was perfected when she reached that age.—Low v. Ramsey (Ky.) 167.

§ 72. In view of Ky. St. § 2525 (Russell's St. § 191), held, that one who was an infant when a right of action accrued had the same length of time to sue after becoming of age that she would have had had she been of age when the cause of action accrued.—Low v. Ramsey (Ky.) 167.

§ 73. Under Rev. St. 1899, §§ 4262, 4263, 4265, 4267 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 2335, 2338, 2342), held, that heirs of a married woman, to whom a right of action to recover an interest in land accrued May 12, 1898, could bring the action within 10 years thereafter, and were not bound to bring it within three years after her death on July 28, 1898.—Rutter v. Carothers (Mo.) 1056.

§ 78. Tacking or cumulating disabilities under the statute of limitations is not allowable.—Rutter v. Carothers (Mo.) 1056.

(F) Ignorance, Mistake, Trust, Fraud, and Concealment of Cause of Action.

§ 103. If a person held title to land in trust for a county, his possession would not be adverse, so as to start the statute of limitations, until there was a repudiation of the trust.—Bell County v. Felts (Tex. Civ. App.) 209.

(H) Commencement of Action or Other Proceeding.

§ 127. An amended complaint in ejectment filed after running of limitations held not to change the cause of action.—Smith v. Scott (Ark.) 501.

III. ACKNOWLEDGMENT, NEW PROMISE, AND PART PAYMENT.

§ 143. Where, at the time land is conveyed, there is an existing vendor's lien against the land, the grantor cannot, after the conveyance, by his acts and declarations, stop the running of limitations against such lien; the grantee not having assumed such debt and having no knowledge of it.—Benedict v. Griffith (Ark.) 479.

§ 155. Part payment made by an agent of the debtor tolls the statute of limitations as effectually as payment by the debtor.—McAbee v. Wiley (Ark.) 623.

IV. OPERATION AND EFFECT OF BAR BY LIMITATION.

§ 167. A lien on land for purchase money expires when the debt is barred by limitations.—Benedict v. Griffith (Ark.) 479.

V. PLEADING, EVIDENCE, TRIAL, AND REVIEW.

§ 180. A defendant may take advantage of limitations by demurrer, when the face of the petition shows the bar to be complete.—Pineland Mfg. Co. v. Guardian Trust Co. (Mo. App.) 1133.

§§ 180, 182. The statute of limitations must be pleaded, unless the petition shows not only a sufficient lapse of time, but nonexistence of any ground of avoidance; but when the petition shows that the action is barred, and that plaintiff is not within any exception in the statute, the question may be raised by demurrer.—Low v. Ramsey (Ky.) 167.

§ 195. The burden was upon one claiming land by adverse possession against a married woman under a deed from her husband to show that the period within which she could have asserted her rights to prevent the running of limitations after her husband's death had elapsed.—Kidd v. Bell (Ky.) 232.

§ 197. Proof of payment on an indebtedness so as to toll the statute of limitations may be shown by direct or circumstantial evidence, the fact of payment tolling the statute, and not its indorsement on the evidence of indebtedness, and the debtor's admission of a payment, he being the only witness at trial to deny payment, is proof of the strongest kind.—McAbee v. Wiley (Ark.) 623.

§ 197. In an action on a note on which was indorsed a partial payment made within the period of limitations, in which defendant pleaded limitations and denied making the payment, evidence held to sustain a finding that defendant made the payment as of the date of the indorsement, so as to justify a verdict for plaintiff.—McAbee v. Wiley (Ark.) 623.

§ 24. The doctrine of lis pendens applies to purchasers or others acquiring title from a party to a pending action, and generally does not apply to strangers to the suit.—McDonald v. Rankin (Ark.) 88.

§ 26. The provisions of the betterment act Kirby's Dig. §§ 2754-2757, granting to a bona fide possessor of land of another a recovery for the value of the improvements made thereon, held based from public policy, and not to be subordinated to the doctrine of lis pendens.—McDonald v. Rankin (Ark.) 88.

Restraining cutting and removal of timber, see Injunction, §§ 52, 118.

§ 3. One purchasing timber from a grantee of land held a bona fide purchaser, and not subject to the vendor's lien.—Beebe Stave Co. v. Austin (Ark.) 482.

§ 3. Where a purchaser of standing timber without notice of a lien on the land executed negotiable notes for the price which the vendor accepted as payment, and then transferred them to an innocent person, the purchaser made full payment, and was a bona fide purchaser, and acquired the timber bought freed from the lien.—Beebe Stave Co. v. Austin (Ark.) 482.

§ 3. Where defendant paid the purchase price of timber under a valid contract to purchase, and entered upon the land by permission and cut the timber, he was its equitable owner, so that it was immaterial whether the agent executing the timber deed had authority to do so.—Davis & Rhea v. Spann (Ark.) 496.

§ 3. A deed of timber held not to be based on any consideration, and vendor was entitled to cancellation and judgment for timber cut.—Risner v. Dunn (Ky.) 203.

MANDAMUS.

I. NATURE AND GROUNDS IN GENERAL.

§ 3. The remedy of a stockholder, denied permission to inspect the corporate books, held to be by mandamus, and not by mandatory injunction.—Brown v. Crystal Ice Co. (Tenn.) 84.

§ 3. The remedy by mandatory injunction to compel a corporation to permit a stockholder to inspect the corporate books held not concurrent with the remedy by mandamus, notwithstanding the act of 1877 (Acts 1877, p. 119, c. 97) giving the chancery court jurisdiction of cases at law.—Brown v. Crystal Ice Co. (Tenn.) 84.

II. SUBJECTS AND PURPOSES OF RELIEF.

(B) Acts and Proceedings of Public Officers and Boards and Municipalities.

§ 76. Under Acts 29th Leg. 1905, p. 285, c. 124, § 89, the appointment of a census trustee by the county superintendent of public instruction is a ministerial duty, which may be enforced by mandamus.—Crow v. Falls (Tex. Civ. App.) 933.

§ 79. The duties under Rev. St. 1895, art. 3993c, added by Laws 1897, p. 211, c. 146, § 1, of a county commissioners' court, to recognize a common school district and accord it the privileges of such a district, held ministerial, which could be enforced by mandamus.—Crow v. Falls (Tex. Civ. App.) 933.

III. JURISDICTION, PROCEEDINGS, AND RELIEF.

§ 146. Where, in mandamus, objection is made on the ground that the name of the state is not used, the court may allow an amendment inserting the name of the state.—Brown v. Crystal Ice Co. (Tenn.) 84.

§ 152. One to whom school lands were awarded after the award thereof to relator was canceled held not a necessary party to mandamus to compel the commissioner to reinstate the award to relator.—Byrne v. Robison (Tex.) 256.

§ 159. Where in mandamus respondent waives the alternative writ and demurs, the petition stands as and for such writ.—State ex rel. School Dist. of Memphis v. Gordon (Mo.) 1008.

§ 167. In mandamus to compel a county commissioners' court to recognize a school district, under allegations of the petition, petitioners held entitled to show any fact which made void the act of the commissioners in changing a district, including the fact that the change was without the consent of the majority of the legal voters thereof.—Crow v. Falls (Tex. Civ. App.) 933.

§ 176. In mandamus to compel a county commissioners' court to recognize a school district and require it to canvass the returns and declare the result of an election for school trustee, the judgment, upon decreeing that the district was legally formed, need not further direct the commissioners to perform ministerial duties imposed upon them by statute as to legal school districts.—Crow v. Falls (Tex. Civ. App.) 933.

§ 178. In mandamus to compel the county commissioners' court to canvass the returns of an election held for school trustees, and declare the result, and, upon a finding that no election was legally held, to declare a vacancy in the board of trustees and require the county superintendent to fill it, the decree, by declaring

§ 187. In mandamus to compel a county commissioners' court to recognize a school district and require it to canvass the returns and declare the result of an election for school trustee held therein, any error in the decree in not directing the commissioners' court to perform any ministerial duty, upon decreeing that the district was legally formed, was not prejudicial to defendant.—Crow v. Falls (Tex. Civ. App.) 933.

§ 187. In mandamus to compel the county commissioners' court to canvass the returns of an election held by school trustees, and declare the result, and, upon a finding that no election was legally held, to declare a vacancy in the board of trustees and required it to be filled, defendants could not complain that the judgment did not expressly declare that the election was not legally held upon decreeing that the vacancy existed and directing that it be filled.—Crow v. Falls (Tex. Civ. App.) 933.

I. THE RELATION.

(B) Statutory Regulation.

§ 14. Acts 28th Leg. 1903, p. 178, c. 112, § 1, approved April 3, 1903, held a penal statute, and hence will not be construed beyond the plain import of its terms.—Beaumont Traction Co. v. State (Tex. Civ. App.) 615, 618.

§ 14. Acts 28th Leg. p. 178, c. 112, § 1, approved April 3, 1903, requiring electric railways to provide appliances to protect motormen from the weather, held valid as a police regulation if otherwise valid.—Beaumont Traction Co. v. State (Tex. Civ. App.) 615, 618.

§ 14. Acts 28th Leg. p. 178, c. 112, §§ 1, 2, approved April 3, 1903, making it unlawful to operate electric street cars without providing screens, and providing a penalty for each offense, held so uncertain as to what constituted an offense thereunder that it cannot be enforced.—Beaumont Traction Co. v. State (Tex. Civ. App.) 615, 618.

employés payable in merchandise, see Bills and Notes, § 162.

§ 70. Only actual notice of the reduction of an employé's wages by a general reduction of employés' wages, given directly by the employer or indirectly through other employés, would terminate the contract of employment, and there could be no constructive notice, nor was the employé bound to exercise diligence to learn of a reduction.—Pennington v. Thompson Bros. Lumber Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 923.

§ 70. While an employé's continuance in service after full knowledge of a general reduction of wages would show an acceptance of such reduction, knowledge that the wages of other employés had been reduced held not necessarily notice of a reduction as to him.—Pennington v. Thompson Bros. Lumber Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 923.

§ 79. An employer issuing checks to his employés payable only in merchandise held not liable in money to the employés or their assignee for the amount of the check unless demand for payment in merchandise is refused.—Attoyac River Lumber Co. v. Payne (Tex. Civ. App.) 278.

§ 80. In an employé's action for the difference between his original salary and the amount which the employer claimed was his salary after it had been reduced by a general notice of reduction of wages, a requested charge held misleading.—Pennington v. Thompson Bros. Lumber Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 923.

§ 80. In an employé's action for the difference between his original salary and the amount which the employer claimed was his salary after it had been reduced by a general notice of reduction of wages, certain testimony held inadmissible under the issues.—Pennington v. Thompson Bros. Lumber Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 923.

§ 80. In an employé's action for the difference between his original salary and the amount which the employer claimed was his salary after it had been reduced by giving notice to employés of a general reduction in wages, testimony by defendant's manager of a notice of reduction of wages given at a meeting of employés held admissible.—Pennington v. Thompson Bros. Lumber Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 923.

§ 83. Where a railroad had incurred a penalty for failure to promptly pay wages due discharged employés under Kirby's Dig. § 6649, amended by Acts 1905, p. 537, a tender of the wages due with interest without the accrued penalty was sufficient to stop the accumulation of the penalty.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Bryant (Ark.) 996.

§ 83. A tender of wages and interest due discharged railroad employés without accrued penalty held not to bar the employés' rights to recover the penalty so accrued under Kirby's Dig. § 6649, amended by Acts 1905, p. 537.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Bryant (Ark.) 996.

§ 83. A tender of wages sued for to the justice of the peace before whom the action was pending held not sufficient to stop the penalty imposed by Kirby's Dig. § 6649, amended by Acts 1905, p. 537.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Bryant (Ark.) 996.

§ 83. "Further employment" offered to discharged railroad employés in order to constitute a defense to a penalty imposed by Kirby's Dig. § 6649, amended by Acts 1905, p. 537, must be employment of the same class and kind and in the same locality in which the wages sued for were earned.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Bryant (Ark.) 996.

III. MASTER'S LIABILITY FOR INJURIES TO SERVANT.

(A) Nature and Extent in General.

Hearsay evidence in action for negligence in regard to furnishing medical attention, see Evidence, § 317.

Release after accrual of liability, see Release, §§ 16, 17, 55.

§ 92. In a suit against a railroad for negligence in providing an injured employé with medical attention, the duty of defendant in respect to sending plaintiff to the place where the company's nearest local surgeon resided stated.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Graves (Tex. Civ. App.) 458.

(B) Tools, Machinery, Appliances, and Places for Work.

Power of state to make regulations relative to blocking switches, etc., as dependent on non-exercise of power by Congress, see Commerce, § 10.

Regulations as to blocking switches, etc., validity as dependent on due process of law, see Constitutional Law, § 301.

§§ 101, 102. A master held not bound to furnish absolutely safe appliances, but only to exercise reasonable care to furnish such appliances as are suitable for the purposes for which they are intended, and to exercise ordinary care to see that they are kept in such condition.—Arkansas Smokeless Coal Co. v. Pippins (Ark.) 113.

§§ 101, 102. "Suitable appliance" defined.—Shohoney v. Quincy, O. & K. C. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1025.

§ 103. It is an absolute duty of a master to furnish his employé a reasonably safe place in which to work.—English v. Roberts, Johnson & Rand Shoe Co. (Mo. App.) 747.

§ 103. Where the master intrusts to another a duty which he cannot delegate, and such other neglects the same, and a servant is injured, the master is liable.—English v. Roberts, Johnson & Rand Shoe Co. (Mo. App.) 747.

§ 103. Right of master to delegate his duties to servants determined.—English v. Roberts, Johnson & Rand Shoe Co. (Mo. App.) 747.

§ 107. The master held bound to make a ditch reasonably safe by shoring the walls; such precaution being possible at slight expense, and the danger from working without it not being obvious.—City of Owensboro v. Gabbert (Ky.) 178.

§ 109. Liability of a master who negligently furnishes his servant with a mule of such a vicious nature that the servant is liable to be injured by it stated.—Arkansas Smokeless Coal Co. v. Pippins (Ark.) 113.

§ 110. A railroad held not liable for injuries to a servant in performing certain switching operations with a road engine, for failure to provide a switch engine.—Shohoney v. Quincy, O. & K. C. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1025.

§ 113. A railroad is liable for injuries occasioned by its neglect in maintaining obstruction near track.—Louisville & N. E. Co. v. Hahn's Adm'r (Ky.) 142.

§ 118. In an action by a servant for personal injuries from being kicked by a mule off a coal car and between it and the walls of a passageway of a coal mine, the employer held not negligent in the construction of the passageway.—Arkansas Smokeless Coal Co. v. Pippins (Ark.) 113.

§ 124. A master's duty to provide reasonably safe machinery and appliances requires the making of a reasonable inspection.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Reed (Ark.) 645.

§ 129. In an action for injuries to a switchman, the equipment of the engine with a Leeds instead of a Tower coupler held not the proximate cause of the accident.—Shohoney v. Quincy, O. & K. C. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1025.

§ 129. Where the mud on a rail was a concurring cause with the defective condition of the wheel and axle of a motor car and of excessive speed of the car in producing its derailment, injuring a servant, the presence of the mud on the rail did not defeat an action for the injury.—Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Street (Tex. Civ. App.) 270.

§ 129. In an action for injuries to a servant, the master's failure to warn plaintiff held not the proximate cause of the accident.—Brazos Oil & Light Co. v. Crawford (Tex. Civ. App.) 916.

(C) Methods of Work, Rules, and Orders.

§ 137. A railroad held not to owe to a watchman employed to keep trespassers on the track from being injured by trains the duty of regulating the speed of its trains.—Wickham's Adm'r v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 154.

§ 137. Where an engine was detached from a train of camp cars, containing a repair crew, at an intermediate station, the ringing of the bell held a sufficient warning of its return to recouple to the occupants of the cars.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Nash (Ky.) 509.

§ 139. Proximate cause of the death of a switchman engaged as brakeman on a loaded coal car held the negligence of fellow servants.—Pratt v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 1125.

§ 139. In a servant's action for injuries sustained while removing the nipple on the bottom of an oil tank car by the oil rushing out into his eyes, negligence of plaintiff's foreman in directing that the nipple be removed without having closed the valve inside the tank held to have caused plaintiff's injury.—Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Sanchez (Tex. Civ. App.) 44.

§ 149. An order to an employé to hurry up the work held not negligence.—English v. Roberts, Johnson & Rand Shoe Co. (Mo. App.) 747.

§ 149. Liability of master for orders in the prosecution of the work determined.—English v. Roberts, Johnson & Rand Shoe Co. (Mo. App.) 747.

§ 149. If defendant knew of the danger in sending an employé under an oil tank car to unscrew the nipple of the pipe when the valve was open, so as to permit the oil to rush out when the nipple was removed, but the servant did not know of the danger and could not discover it, defendant would be liable for resulting injuries.—Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Sanchez (Tex. Civ. App.) 44.

(D) Warning and Instructing Servant.

§ 153. In an action for injuries to a minor servant, defendant held negligent in failing to instruct plaintiff as to the proper method of cleaning a machine, and of not warning him of the danger of cleaning it while in motion.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Plummer (Tex. Civ. App.) 942.

§ 158. Plaintiff's injury held to have proximately resulted from defendant's negligence in failing to instruct him as to the proper method of cleaning a machine, and in failing to warn him of the danger of cleaning it while in motion.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Plummer (Tex. Civ. App.) 942.

(E) Fellow Servants.

§ 168. Reasonable care in the selection of persons fit to perform the master's duty of in-

§ 177. Where the undisputed evidence showed that a servant was injured by negligence of a fellow servant, there could be no recovery from the master.—Reliance Textile & Dye Works Co. v. Williams (Ky.) 207.

§ 179. The court must give to the fellow servant statute such an interpretation as will best afford employes, working in dangerous positions, protection.—Pratt v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 1125.

§ 180. Rev. St. 1899, § 2864, as amended by Laws 1905, p. 135 (Am. St. 1906, p. 1637), held to cover the operation of trains and cars at terminal yards.—Pratt v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 1125.

§ 188. Where an employe is injured through the negligence of a superior servant, a ground of action against the master is prima facie shown.—English v. Roberts, Johnson & Rand Shoe Co. (Mo. App.) 747.

§ 188. It is the character of the act complained of, and not the rank of the servant, which determines the master's liability for the acts of a servant occupying the dual capacity of fellow and also superior servant.—English v. Roberts, Johnson & Rand Shoe Co. (Mo. App.) 747.

§ 190. A master is liable for injuries to a servant whether the negligent act was done by a superior servant or by another under his orders.—John Diebold & Sons v. Wollborn (Ky.) 212.

§ 190. When a foreman temporarily takes a place vacant by the absence of a laborer under him, he does not surrender a superior's duties and obligations; but the master will be responsible for his negligence resulting in injury to a subordinate employe.—John Diebold & Sons v. Wollborn (Ky.) 212.

§ 190. The act of one occupying the dual capacity of superior and fellow servant in prematurely starting a machine at which both he and plaintiff worked, resulting in plaintiff's injury, was in the capacity of fellow servant, for which the master is not liable.—English v. Roberts, Johnson & Rand Shoe Co. (Mo. App.) 747.

§ 190. A servant injured by the acts of another occupying the dual capacity of superior and fellow servant cannot recover against the master without showing that the injury resulted from an act in the exercise of the authority of the master, distinct from any manual act in the common employment.—English v. Roberts, Johnson & Rand Shoe Co. (Mo. App.) 747.

§ 190. Where an employe is injured through the negligence of a superior servant in exercising the authority of the master by negligently directing the performance of a dangerous task, the master is prima facie liable for the injury.—English v. Roberts, Johnson & Rand Shoe Co. (Mo. App.) 747.

§ 191. A servant is entitled to recover against the master for injuries caused by the negligence of a collaborer engaged in a different line of work.—Broadway Coal Mining Co. v. Davis (Ky.) 228.

§ 197. An engineer in charge of a derrick engine used to hoist stones for the walls of a building and a stone mason charged with the duty of receiving and placing them in position are fellow servants; but the rule does not apply when the foreman acts in the engineer's place in his temporary absence.—John Diebold & Sons v. Wollborn (Ky.) 212.

§ 201. A railroad brakeman held entitled to recover for injuries sustained by the railroad company's negligence, though the negligence of his fellow servants concurred in producing the the master for injuries caused by the gross negligence of a superior servant.—Broadway Coal Mining Co. v. Davis (Ky.) 228.

(F) Risks Assumed by Servant.

§ 203. A servant does not assume risks created by the negligence of his master.—Pratt v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 1125.

§ 205. Rule as to assumption of risks by servants, stated.—Warren's Adm'r v. Jeunesse (Ky.) 862.

§ 205. In a servant's action for injuries sustained while removing the nipple from the bottom of an oil tank car, by the oil rushing into his eyes, by reason of the valve inside the tank not having been closed, plaintiff held not to have assumed the risk of injury from such cause.—Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Sanchez (Tex. Civ. App.) 44.

§ 210. A trainman knowing of obstruction maintained by the railroad near track does not assume the risk.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hahn's Adm'r (Ky.) 142.

§ 216. Where two employes are working together in the performance of a common task, and the inferior servant is injured by the negligence of the superior in the performance of an act incident to the common employment, the master is not liable as the risk ordinarily incident to the employment was assumed.—English v. Roberts, Johnson & Rand Shoe Co. (Mo. App.) 747.

§ 217. Where a master negligently furnishes his servant with a mule of such a vicious nature that the servant is liable to be injured by it, the master will not be liable, if the servant knew that the animal was dangerous, but continued to use it.—Arkansas Smokeless Coal Co. v. Pippins (Ark.) 113.

§ 217. A railroad brakeman held not to have assumed the risk as a matter of law of the danger of injuries from a collision between a train on which he was riding and certain ballast cars permitted to run onto the main track because of the railroad's failure to provide a derailler or other safety device.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Corman (Ark.) 116.

§ 218. A minor servant does not assume the risk unless he not only knows the danger, but is aware of its extent, and has sufficient discretion to comprehend the risk.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Plummer (Tex. Civ. App.) 942.

§ 218. The rule relating to a minor servant's assumption of risk is not affected by the fact that the contract of employment was made by his parents.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Plummer (Tex. Civ. App.) 942.

§ 219. A ditch, which a servant was digging when the sides caved and injured him, held not such an obviously dangerous place of work that one of common understanding would not have continued to work therein.—City of Owensboro v. Gabbert (Ky.) 178.

§ 222. The master, by directing plaintiff to work in a ditch after his attention was called to its dangerous condition and the necessity of bracing it, held liable for injuries caused by its caving, even if the place was such that plaintiff created the danger in working, so that the rule as to a safe place of work would not apply.—City of Owensboro v. Gabbert (Ky.) 178.

§ 222. The rule as to a servant's assumption of risk of injury from working in an unsafe place when he continues to work under the master's direction, stated.—City of Owensboro v. Gabbert (Ky.) 178.

§ 226. A servant assumes the risk of all dangers incident to the service, but not those arising from his employer's negligence of which he has no knowledge.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Corman (Ark.) 116.

(G) Contributory Negligence of Servant.
Laws depriving railroad companies of defense of contributory negligence in actions for injuries caused by unblocked switches, etc., as denial of due process of law, see Constitutional Law, § 301.

§ 231. Where plaintiff notified his superior that a coal car was off the track, and the latter brought a gang and replaced it on the track, and plaintiff left the car before it was chocked, plaintiff could assume that the car was securely chocked.—Broadway Coal Mining Co. v. Davis (Ky.) 228.

§ 231. In a servant's action for injuries sustained while removing the nipple from the bottom of an oil tank car, by the oil rushing into his eyes, by reason of the valve inside the tank not having been closed, plaintiff held not guilty of contributory negligence.—Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Sanchez (Tex. Civ. App.) 44.

§ 236. A watchman suddenly stepping without looking from a place of safety before an approaching train, which he knew was due, held guilty of negligence as a matter of law.—Wickham's Adm'r v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 154.

§ 236. A servant held precluded by his neglect from recovering for injuries received.—Trosper v. East Jellico Coal Co. (Ky.) 205.

§ 236. Rule applicable to stationary structures at the side of railroad tracks or overhead bridges held not applicable to a low cross-beam in a mine.—Trosper v. East Jellico Coal Co. (Ky.) 205.

§ 236. A teamster, injured by being caught between a load of lumber and the top of a shed, held negligent though he was assured that he could pass under the shed with safety.—Slagel v. Chas. H. Nold Lumber Co. (Mo. App.) 321.

§ 236. A section hand injured from being struck by a train held negligent as a matter of law.—Williamson v. Wabash R. Co. (Mo. App.) 1113.

§ 248. In actions for injuries to section hands, the humanitarian doctrine held not applicable until the engineer is made aware from the appearance of the section hand that he is in real peril.—Williamson v. Wabash R. Co. (Mo. App.) 1113.

(H) Actions.

Actions for wrongful death, see Death, § 47.

Expert testimony, see Evidence, § 556.

Expert testimony as to safety of appliances, see Evidence, § 513.

Hearsay evidence, see Evidence, § 317.

Competency of evidence as to knowledge of danger, see Evidence, § 151.

Penalty recoverable for wrongful death, see Death, § 78.

§ 262. In an action for the death of a servant, held necessary to plead the defense of contributory negligence.—Lewis v. Texas & P. Ry. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 605.

§ 264. In a servant's action for injuries by oil spouting from the bottom of a tank into plaintiff's eyes, when he removed the nipple from the pipe, evidence that gravel in the valve caused the oil to spout upon its removal held properly refused under the pleadings.—Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Sanchez (Tex. Civ. App.) 44.

§ 264. In an action against a railroad for death of a locomotive engineer, certain evidence held admissible under the pleadings.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Bradt (Tex. Civ. App.) 59.

§ 265. In an action by a servant for personal injuries, the burden is on the servant to show that the master was negligent.—Arkansas Smokeless Coal Co. v. Pippins (Ark.) 113.

§ 265. A master's negligence in failing to provide safe machinery may be shown by proof that the defect was discoverable by the exercise of reasonable care, so that the master was either negligent in failing to discover it or was negligent in failing to repair it after discovery.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Reed (Ark.) 645.

§ 265. Proof that the death of deceased, an engineer, was caused by a displaced, unlocked switch held to make out a prima facie case of negligence against defendant railroad.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Bradt (Tex. Civ. App.) 59.

§ 265. A master, sued for the negligent death of a servant, has the burden of proving the knowledge of the servant of the conditions on which to predicate assumption of risk.—Lewis v. Texas & P. Ry. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 605.

§ 270. In an action for death of a servant alleged to have been caused by defective instrumentalities, including an engine, testimony of a witness that, when he examined the engine months afterwards, it was sufficient, was inadmissible, where he could not say, except inferentially, that the engine was in the same condition when the accident happened.—Warren's Adm'r v. Jeunesse (Ky.) 862.

§ 270. In an action for death of a servant from alleged insufficient instrumentalities certain evidence as to the sufficiency of the appliances held competent.—Warren's Adm'r v. Jeunesse (Ky.) 862.

§ 270. Evidence of the general abandonment of a particular appliance is inadmissible, unless it appears that it was abandoned because another appliance was safer.—Shohoney v. Quincy, O. & K. C. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1025.

§ 270. In an action at common law for injuries to a switchman, evidence of an interstate commerce inspector that all railroads are doing away with the Leeds coupler because the law makes them held inadmissible.—Shohoney v. Quincy, O. & K. C. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1025.

§ 270. In a suit against a railroad for negligence in providing an injured employé with medical attention, the testimony of a witness that at plaintiff's request he notified defendants' local agent of the injury was admissible.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Graves (Tex. Civ. App.) 458.

§ 276. In an action for the death of a locomotive fireman, evidence held to support a finding that decedent was struck by a semaphore pole maintained so close to the track as to authorize a recovery.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hahn's Adm'r (Ky.) 142.

§ 278. Evidence held to sustain a finding that defendant railroad company was negligent in failing to install a derailing device to prevent the escape of certain cars from a storage track constructed on a descending grade.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Corman (Ark.) 116.

§ 278. In an action for injuries to a servant by the breaking of the crank lever of a railroad hand car, evidence held to warrant a finding that there was a visible defect in the bar, and that defendant was negligent in failing to discover it.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Reed (Ark.) 645.

§ 279. In a coal miner's action for injuries by being run over by a coal car which was chocked under the direction of another employé, as entitled an injured employé to go to the jury.—Rippeto v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 314.

§ 286. A master's negligence in failing to exercise ordinary care in discovering or repairing a visible defect in machinery which caused an accident is for the jury.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Reed (Ark.) 645.

§ 286. In a switchman's action for injuries caused by being thrown from a switch engine cab, whether plaintiff was thrown from the engine by the gross negligence of the engineer in running it at a dangerous speed held for the jury.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Crutcher (Ky.) 191.

§ 286. On the evidence, whether the engineer signaled approach of engine and cars temporarily detached to be recoupled to train held for the jury.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Nash (Ky.) 509.

§ 286. The use of a Leeds coupler, which did not comply with the standard prescribed by the safety appliance act of Congress (Act March 2, 1893, c. 196, 27 Stat. 531 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3174]), did not constitute negligence per se, unless it was not reasonably safe.—Shohoney v. Quincy, O. & K. C. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1025.

§ 286. In an action for injuries to a switchman, evidence of the engineer's negligence in prematurely running his engine forward after a coupling had failed held for the jury.—Shohoney v. Quincy, O. & K. C. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1025.

§ 287. Where the evidence was conflicting, the question of negligence held for the jury.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Wynne (Tex. Civ. App.) 50.

§ 289. Whether a locomotive fireman killed by being struck by a semaphore pole near the track was guilty of contributory negligence held for the jury.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hahn's Adm'r (Ky.) 142.

§ 289. Railroad employé held not negligent as matter of law in attempting to pass from car to car while engine was uncoupled, in the absence of warning of return of engine.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Nash (Ky.) 509.

§ 289. Whether one had the right to rely on assurances of his boss as to the safety of the roof of a mine, rather than on the warnings of his associates, is a question for the jury.—McHenry Coal Co. v. Phelps (Ky.) 829.

§ 289. In an action for injuries to a section hand struck by a train, held that, notwithstanding plaintiff's negligence, he was entitled to go to the jury on the issue of last clear chance negligence.—Williamson v. Wabash R. Co. (Mo. App.) 1113.

§ 289. Whether a switchman, killed while engaged as a brakeman on a loaded coal car in a collision with another car, was guilty of contributory negligence, held for the jury.—Pratt v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 1125.

§ 289. The selection by a servant of the more dangerous of two or more ways of doing a given act held not as a matter of law to constitute contributory negligence.—Lewis v. Texas & P. Ry. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 605.

§ 291. In a servant's action for injuries by oil spouting from the bottom of an oil tank into his eyes because the valve was open when he removed the nipple from the pipe, allegations of the answer held to authorize an instruction that defendant would be liable if the spouting oil was a latent danger known to defendant but not to as requiring instruction as requiring instruction by experts in cast iron.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Reed (Ark.) 645.

§ 293. In a switchman's action for injuries by being thrown from a switch engine, an instruction on plaintiff's right to recover held not sufficiently concrete as to plaintiff's contention, and that the court should have instructed as stated.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Crutcher (Ky.) 191.

§ 293. A charge held not erroneous for omitting to predicate liability on failure to scale the roof of a mine; no precautions having been taken to make it safe.—McHenry Coal Co. v. Phelps (Ky.) 829.

§ 293. In an action for death of a servant, a certain charge held not objectionable.—Warren's Adm'r v. Jeunesse (Ky.) 862.

§ 293. In an action for injuries to plaintiff, an instruction authorizing consideration of the alleged general abandonment of the Leeds coupler, with which plaintiff was required to work at the time of the injury, in determining whether or not it was sufficient, held erroneous.—Shohoney v. Quincy, O. & K. C. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1025.

§ 293. In an action for injuries to a switchman, an instruction that if the Leeds coupler had been generally abandoned, and was not reasonably safe, and another kind was safe and easily accessible, it was defendant's duty to discard the Leeds held erroneous.—Shohoney v. Quincy, O. & K. C. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1025.

§ 293. In an action against a railroad for death of an engineer through the derailment of his engine at an open switch, a charge that negligence of a servant was negligence of the master held proper under the evidence.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Bradt (Tex. Civ. App.) 59.

§ 293. In a suit against a railroad for negligence in providing an injured employé with medical attention, held, that it was error to refuse a charge exonerating defendant from liability on a particular state of facts.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Graves (Tex. Civ. App.) 458.

§ 294. In a coal miner's action for injuries by a coal car breaking loose and running over him an instruction held erroneous as authorizing a recovery if the accident was caused by the negligence of a fellow servant in chocking the car under orders from the foreman.—Broadway Coal Mining Co. v. Davis (Ky.) 228.

§ 295. In a switchman's action for injuries by being thrown from a switch engine cab, which plaintiff claimed was caused by the engine swaying violently when run at a high speed, an instruction on assumed risk held not sufficiently concrete, and that the court should have instructed as stated.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Crutcher (Ky.) 191.

§ 295. In an action for death of a servant, a charge held misleading.—Warren's Adm'r v. Jeunesse (Ky.) 862.

§ 295. An instruction held not objectionable as requiring both a finding of assumed risk and contributory negligence to prevent a recovery by a servant.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Plummer (Tex. Civ. App.) 942.

§ 296. In a switchman's action for injuries by being thrown from a switch engine cab, an instruction on contributory negligence held not sufficiently concrete to present the issues, and that the court should have instructed as stated.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Crutcher (Ky.) 191.

§ 296. A charge as to contributory negligence on the part of one injured by the fall of the roof of a mine held sufficient.—McHenry Coal Co. v. Phelps (Ky.) 829.

§ 296. An instruction held not objectionable as requiring both a finding of assumed risk and contributory negligence to prevent a recovery by a servant.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Plummer (Tex. Civ. App.) 942.

§ 296. An instruction for injuries to a minor held not objectionable as giving an incorrect statement of the degree of care required of him.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Plummer (Tex. Civ. App.) 942.

IV. LIABILITIES FOR INJURIES TO THIRD PERSONS.

(A) Acts or Omissions of Servant.

§ 302. An act held not within the scope of a servant's authority, so as to make the master liable therefor.—Corrigan v. Hunter (Ky.) 131.

§ 302. The master, though a corporation, held to have authorized an assault on a new employé by old employés in the course of an "initiation," and so to be liable.—Medlin Milling Co. v. Boutwell (Tex. Civ. App.) 442.

(C) Actions.

§ 330. Evidence held not to show ratification by a master of the servant's unauthorized act.—Corrigan v. Hunter (Ky.) 131.

§ 330. Where an engineer was charged with negligently operating a train, proof of his reputation as being a careful and prudent engineer held inadmissible.—Adams v. International & G. N. R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 895.

Ross (Ky.) 161.

§ 162. Ky. St. § 2947 (Russell's St. § 626), relating to bond recorders in cities, construed, and held to import that the bond recorder is to receive $4,000 a year and $1,000 a year for each deputy actually employed, not exceeding two.—Commonwealth v. Ross (Ky.) 161.

(B) Municipal Departments and Officers Thereof.

§ 177. A vacancy in the police and fire commission of a city of the second class held, under the facts, not to arise so as to authorize the mayor under Ky. St. 1909, § 3137 (Russell's St. § 1144), to fill it without the approval of the board of aldermen.—Ulrich v. Koustmer (Ky.) 857.

§ 195. A member of the police and fire commission of a city of the second class held, under Ky. St. 1909, § 3137 (Russell's St. § 1144), not to hold over till his successor is appointed and qualified (sections 3118, 3126, 3143 [Russell's St. §§ 1216, 1028, 1080]).—Ulrich v. Koustmer (Ky.) 857.

VII. CONTRACTS IN GENERAL.

§ 248. The doctrine of ratification, as applied to the acts of municipal officers, stated.—Gallup v. Liberty County (Tex. Civ. App.) 291.

§ 252. A contract of a city to supply water held terminable at will.—Sturgeon v. City of Paris (Tex. Civ. App.) 967.

IX. PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

(A) Power to Make Improvements or Grant Aid Therefor.

§ 284. A provision in a street improvement contract requiring the contractor to proceed on notice from the city engineer held not objectionable as a delegation of legislative power to the city engineer.—Halsey v. Richardson (Mo. App.) 326.

(B) Preliminary Proceedings and Ordinances or Resolutions.

§ 304. Failure of an ordinance to specify a time within which a public improvement should be completed held not a fatal defect.—Halsey v. Richardson (Mo. App.) 326.

§ 305. A form of contract attached to plans and specifications for a street improvement held not made a part of the ordinance by reference therein to the plans and specifications for information respecting details.—Halsey v. Richardson (Mo. App.) 326.

(C) Contracts.

§ 362. Whether a municipal contractor completed his contract within a reasonable time held a question of fact, to be solved by the trier of fact in the light of the surrounding circumstances.—Halsey v. Richardson (Mo. App.) 326.

§ 364. A city contractor held not responsible for delay in improving a street caused by the city engineer's failure to set grade stakes and because of a street railway company's failure to replace its rails.—Halsey v. Richardson (Mo. App.) 326.

(E) Assessments for Benefits, and Special Taxes.

Existence of lien as breach of covenant against incumbrances, see Covenants, § 96.

§ 414. It was no valid objection to an assessment for a street improvement that it included payment for work done on the side-

§ 456. Under St. Louis City Charter, lots made by the use of the owner into one lot held required to be assessed for a public improvement as one lot.—Fruin v. Meredith (Mo. App.) 1107.

§ 485. Special tax bills, if regular in form, make out a prima facie case against the owner of the property.—Halsey v. Richardson (Mo. App.) 326.

§ 485. The courts could not invalidate special tax bills on doubtful grounds.—Fruin v. Meredith (Mo. App.) 1107.

§ 485. The questions whether a street improvement was made in accordance with the contract and at a reasonable price, and was an improvement enhancing the value of the property assessed, are not open to inquiry, in an action on special tax bills.—Fruin v. Meredith (Mo. App.) 1107.

(F) Enforcement of Assessments and Special Taxes.

§ 558. An action on a special tax bill is an action at law.—Fruin v. Meredith (Mo. App.) 1107.

§ 564. St. Louis City Charter, art. 6, § 25, as amended in 1901 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4863), held not to bar an action on special tax bills payable in installments in two years after the failure to pay an installment.—Fruin v. Meredith (Mo. App.) 1107.

§ 567. In an action on special tax bills, the defense that one tax bill should have been issued held available under the general denial.—Fruin v. Meredith (Mo. App.) 1107.

§ 568. In an action on special tax bills on distinct lots, defended on the ground that the use by the owner had made the lots one lot for purposes of assessment, evidence held to support a finding that the lots remained distinct lots for assessment, and that the special tax bills were valid.—Fruin v. Meredith (Mo. App.) 1107.

X. POLICE POWER AND REGULATIONS.

(A) Delegation, Extent, and Exercise of Power.

§ 605. Rev. St. 1895, arts. 419, 453, 460, held to authorize a city council to abate a nuisance unless the thing complained of is not a nuisance per se.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. City of Belton (Tex. Civ. App.) 413.

XI. USE AND REGULATION OF PUBLIC PLACES, PROPERTY, AND WORKS.

(A) Streets and Other Public Ways.

§ 697. A band stand in the street held to be a continuing nuisance, against which injunction would lie after its completion.—Atterbury v. West (Mo. App.) 1106.

XII. TORTS.

(A) Exercise of Governmental and Corporate Powers in General.

§ 733. The law in exempting a municipality from liability for defects in its public buildings used for governmental purposes, etc., held to place them on the same footing with the state and counties thereof.—Schwalk's Adm'r v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 860.

§ 733. That municipalities are liable for negligence in not keeping their streets in repair held an exception to the general rule exempting municipalities from liability for negligence in the performance of governmental duties.—Schwalk's Adm'r v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 860.

§ 736. A city acts in its individual, and not in its governmental capacity, in disposing of its garbage, and is liable as an individual for creating a nuisance in doing so, so that it would be liable to an adjoining owner, irrespective of negligence, where it established a garbage dump on its own land, the noxious odors from which made it uncomfortable and dangerous to reside on adjacent land.—City of Paris v. Jenkins (Tex. Civ. App.) 411.

(B) Acts or Omissions of Officers or Agents.

§ 747. A municipality in maintaining a city hall held performing a governmental duty, and not liable for negligence of servants performing its business therein.—Schwalk's Adm'r v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 860.

§ 747. Persons employed in a city hall in managing and conducting the affairs of the municipality are public officers, charged with the performance of public duties, so that the doctrine of respondeat superior does not apply to such employments.—Schwalk's Adm'r v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 860.

(C) Defects or Obstructions in Streets and Other Public Ways.

§ 759. That a city was without funds to construct sidewalks held no defense to an action for injuries from falling on a defective sidewalk.—City of Mayfield v. Hughley (Ky.) 838.

§ 775. A city has no authority to incurber one of its streets with paving material to be used in the improvement of another street.—City of Louisville v. Tompkins (Ky.) 174.

§ 788. The duty of a municipality to keep its streets and sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition for persons traveling thereon extends to cases where the obstructions or unsafe conditions of the street is brought about by persons other than the agents of the city; but the party seeking to recover for failure to perform that duty must show that the city had knowledge of the defect, or might have had knowledge thereof by the use of reasonable care.—City of Mayfield v. Hughley (Ky.) 838.

§ 791. In an action for injuries from falling over an obstruction in a street, the city held chargeable with notice thereof.—City of Mayfield v. Hughley (Ky.) 838.

§ 800. The negligence of a city in maintaining a defective sidewalk held the proximate cause of the injury to a pedestrian.—Snickles v. City of St. Joseph (Mo. App.) 1122.

§ 812. Rev. St. 1899, § 5724 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2909), relating to notice of injury on a defective sidewalk, held satisfied where the notice given will enable the city officers to locate the defect causing the injury.—Snickles v. City of St. Joseph (Mo. App.) 1122.

§ 812. A notice of injury to a pedestrian on a defective sidewalk held sufficient within Rev. St. 1899, § 5724 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2909).—Snickles v. City of St. Joseph (Mo. App.) 1122.

§ 821. A traveler's failure to observe an obstruction in a street by which she was thrown from her wagon and injured held not contributory negligence as a matter of law.—City of Louisville v. Tompkins (Ky.) 174.

§ 821. A city held to impliedly invite a pedestrian to use a sidewalk, so that the issue of his contributory negligence is for the jury.—Snickles v. City of St. Joseph (Mo. App.) 1122.

(D) Defects or Obstructions in Sewers, Drains, and Water Courses.

§ 834. Certain evidence held insufficient to show that defendant city had assumed jurisdiction and supervision over a street laid out over a fill in a stream, so as to render it liable for damages to plaintiff's property resulting from an overflow caused by the fill.—Hedrick v. City of St. Joseph (Mo. App.) 375.

XIII. FISCAL MANAGEMENT, PUBLIC DEBT, SECURITIES, AND TAXATION.

(A) Power to Incur Indebtedness and Expenditures.

Effect of partial invalidity of statute, see Statutes, § 64.

§ 871. Sp. Laws 1905, p. 87, c. 6, § 252, held not to authorize a city, in construction of Const. art. 3, § 52, to grant a thing of value to an individual.—Sturgeon v. City of Paris (Tex. Civ. App.) 907.

(F) Verdict or Findings Contrary to Law or Evidence.

§ 66. Where a case has been decided against the ruling of the trial judge, it is his duty to set aside the verdict.—Shohoney v. Quincy, O. & K. O. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1025.

§ 71. A verdict for a servant should not be set aside because defendant's evidence tended to show contributory negligence and assumption of risk; they being jury questions.—Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Sanchez (Tex. Civ. App.) 44.

§ 72. On conflicting evidence, the court could set aside the verdict as contrary to the weight of evidence, and grant a new trial.—Warner v. Michel (Mo. App.) 338.

(H) Newly Discovered Evidence.

§ 102. Defendants held not to have shown sufficient diligence to entitle them to a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence.—Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Kimball (Tex.) 533.

§ 108. A new trial will not be granted for newly discovered evidence which is immaterial.—Saxton v. Corbett (Tex. Civ. App.) 75.

III. PROCEEDINGS TO PROCURE NEW TRIAL.

§ 117. Where a motion for a new trial is filed within the four days required by statute, an amendment thereto filed after the expiration of such time is a nullity.—Fusselman v. Wabash R. Co. (Mo. App.) 1187.

I. PRIVATE NUISANCES.

(A) Nature of Injury, and Liability Therefor.

§ 3. One dumping garbage on his land, the noxious odors from which make it uncomfortable and dangerous to reside on adjacent land, would be liable to the adjoining owner for creating and maintaining a nuisance.—City of Paris v. Jenkins (Tex. Civ. App.) 411.

(D) Actions for Damages.

§ 50. The injury resulting to plaintiff's property by the creation of a nuisance by a city by dumping garbage held under the pleading and evidence to be only temporary, so that the measure of damages was the depreciation in rental value of the property, and not its depreciation in market value.—City of Paris v. Jenkins (Tex. Civ. App.) 411.

II. PUBLIC NUISANCES.

(B) Rights and Remedies of Private Persons.

§ 72. The law is that injunction by individuals will not lie to prevent a nuisance when injury is common to the public; but it does not apply when plaintiffs' injury is special, and they have suffered, and will suffer, damage over and above injury to the community at large.—Atterbury v. West (Mo. App.) 1103.

(C) Abatement and Injunction.

§ 84. Whether a bridge maintained by a railroad over its tracks for a public road is a nuisance is a question for the jury.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. City of Belton (Tex. Civ. App.) 413.

I. FORM AND ALLEGATIONS IN GENERAL.

§ 9. Where the facts pleaded are such that from them the law imputes either fraud or mistake, it need not be pleaded in terms.—Boggs v. Bush (Ky.) 220.

II. DECLARATION, COMPLAINT, PETITION, OR STATEMENT.

In action for breach of contract, see Sales, § 377.

§ 72. A general prayer for relief and offer to do equity is sufficient in order to invoke the powers of equity to set aside an inequitable transaction, without specifically pleading a tender of the money received thereunder, as the court will require complainant to put the other party in statu quo as the price of its decree.—Dalpine v. Lume (Mo. App.) 776.

III. PLEA OR ANSWER, CROSS-COMPLAINT, AND AFFIDAVIT OF DEFENSE.

In action for injuries to servant, see Master and Servant, § 262.

Necessity of process on cross-plea, see Process, § 4.

(A) Defenses in General.

§ 93. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 605 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 635), a defendant in an action for price of goods may not set up a general denial and special pleas alleging a breach of warranty, as the defenses are inconsistent.—Wertheimer-Swarts Shoe Co. v. McDonald (Mo. App.) 5.

§ 93. A general denial held to be waived by special pleas of breach of warranty, such pleas being inconsistent with the general denial.—Wertheimer-Swarts Shoe Co. v. McDonald (Mo. App.) 5.

§ 93. Two certain defenses held not to be coupled in an answer because proof of one would disprove the other.—Jones v. Shepard (Mo. App.) 764.

IV. REPLICATION OR REPLY AND SUBSEQUENT PLEADINGS.

§ 177. A limited liability stipulation, set out in plaintiff's supplemental petition in an action against a telegraph company for delay in transmitting and delivering a telegram, held an express admission of facts, within Rev. St. 1895, art. 1193.—Postal Telegraph Cable Co. of Texas v. Harriss (Tex. Civ. App.) 891.

V. DEMURRER OR EXCEPTION.

Harmless error in rulings, see Appeal and Error, § 1040.

To petitioner in proceedings to set aside election on question of issuance of school district bonds, see Schools and School Districts, § 97.

§ 214. On demurrer to the petition, the facts therein alleged must be accepted as true.—Patterson v. Patterson (Ky.) 169.

§ 214. A demurrer to a pleading held to admit allegations of fact well pleaded, but not allegations announcing a mere conclusion of law.—Meek v. Hurst (Mo.) 1022.

§ 214. The allegations of the petition must be taken as true for the purposes of a general demurrer thereto.—Ramon v. Saenz (Tex. Civ. App.) 928.

§ 218. Every reasonable intentment favorable to the petition must be indulged on general demurrer thereto.—Ramon v. Saenz (Tex. Civ. App.) 928.

§ 228. A judgment sustaining an exception to a pleading should be construed as going no further than the exception itself.—Blewitt v. Greene (Tex. Civ. App.) 914.

§ 228. Allegations of a petition must be taken as true for the purpose of exceptions thereto.—Crow v. Fails (Tex. Civ. App.) 933.

§ 248. Where both the original and amended petitions were based upon a breach of the same contract, that plaintiff construed the contract as one of agency in the original petition and as one of sale in the amended petition did not make the amended petition set up a new cause of action.—Kirby Lumber Co. v. C. R. Cummings & Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 273.

§ 252. A new demand, after filing an amended petition, is not necessary, where demand was made before action, and the allegations in the amended petition do not create a new cause of action.—City of Columbus v. Bank of Columbus (Ky.) 835.

§ 280. The office of a supplemental answer, defined.—Blewitt v. Greene (Tex. Civ. App.) 914.

VII. SIGNATURE AND VERIFICATION.

§ 291. In an action on a contract signed by a party, but not delivered, its execution must be denied under oath.—American Copying Co. v. Muleski (Mo. App.) 384.

§ 293. Where, in an action against a railroad and its receiver, allegations in the petition as to plaintiff's right under an order of court to sue the receiver were not denied by the receiver under oath as required by Rev. St. 1895, art. 1265, it was not necessary for plaintiff to prove them.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Wynne (Tex. Civ. App.) 50.

§ 301. A pleading must be made and verified as required by the laws of Kentucky, though executed in another state.—Crane & Breed Mfg. Co. v. Stagg's Adm'r (Ky.) 225.

VIII. PROPERT, OYER, AND EXHIBITS.

§ 310. Exhibits which form no part of the complaint may be referred to for an explanation of the complaint.—Bouldin v. Jennings (Ark.) 639.

§ 311. An exhibit attached to a pleading is not a part thereof, and an answer which merely alleges that a matter was attached to the petition as an exhibit does not make the same a part of the answer.—A. C. L. Haase & Sons Fish Co. v. Merchants' Despatch Transp. Co. (Mo. App.) 362.

X. FILING, SERVICE, AND WITHDRAWAL.

§ 336. The indorsement on the back of a petition is no part of the petition and need not be included in the copy served on defendant.—Wichita Mill & Elevator Co. v. State (Tex. Civ. App.) 427.

XI. MOTIONS.

§ 350. The nature of a motion for judgment on the pleadings stated.—O'Day v. Sanford (Mo. App.) 3; Wertheimer-Swartz Shoe Co. v. McDonald (Mo. App.) 5.

§ 352. An answer to a complaint for the price of goods which sets up a general denial and special pleas of breach of warranty cannot be stricken as an entirety because the special pleas state no defense, since the general denial would be sufficient defense to the action.—Wertheimer-Swartz Shoe Co. v. McDonald (Mo. App.) 5.

§ 352. A general denial held to be waived by special pleas, so that a motion to strike the entire answer for inconsistency would not lie.—

nite and uncertain does not lie.—Wertheimer-Swartz Shoe Co. v. McDonald (Mo. App.) 5.

§ 367. A motion to make more definite and certain a complaint for cutting and removing timber from several tracts of land held to be the remedy applicable, where the complaint did not set forth the description and value of the timber cut on each tract.—Stoneman-Zearing Lumber Co. v. McComb (Ark.) 648.

§ 367. Where an answer setting up breach of warranty is too indefinite and uncertain, the proper remedy is by motion to make more definite and certain.—Wertheimer-Swartz Shoe Co. v. McDonald (Mo. App.) 5.

XII. ISSUES, PROOF, AND VARIANCE.

In particular actions or proceedings.

See Mandamus, § 167; Replevin, § 69; Trespass to try Title, § 35.

For breach of contract, see Contracts, § 346. For breach of covenant, see Covenants, § 116. For injuries to passenger, see Carriers, § 315. For injuries to servant, see Master and Servant, § 264.

§ 378. An answer, containing a general denial only, puts in issue all the affirmations of the petition to which it refers.—Handlan v. Miller (Mo. App.) 751.

§ 378. In an action for delay in transmitting and delivering a telegram, the burden was on defendant, under Rev. St. 1895, art. 1193, to prove a limited liability stipulation pleaded, unless expressly admitted by plaintiff.—Postal Telegraph Cable Co. of Texas v. Harriess (Tex. Civ. App.) 891.

§ 395. Though the Code has abolished the distinction between the forms of action, and though one can waive the tort and sue in assumpsit, a plaintiff cannot sue upon one cause of action and recover upon another.—Griswold v. Haas (Mo. App.) 781.

§ 398. The variance between the partition in an action for services and an instruction held not misleading.—Carrell v. McDonnell (Mo. App.) 1129.

XIII. DEFECTS AND OBJECTIONS, WAIVER, AND AID BY VERDICT OR JUDGMENT.

§ 406. Description of land, in a petition for an injunction against trespass, held sufficient in the absence of a special exception.—Mitchell v. Burnett (Tex. Civ. App.) 937.

§ 406. A petition for an injunction, though containing no allegation that the threatened wrong will result in irreparable injury, and that petitioner has no legal remedy, is sufficient in the absence of special exception.—Mitchell v. Burnett (Tex. Civ. App.) 937.

§ 409. In a suit to foreclose a trust deed against the mortgagor and his grantee, plaintiff cannot take advantage of the grantee's failure to answer, where he went to trial, and no judgment was entered against the grantee.—Ward v. Blythe (Ark.) 508.

§ 418. Error in overruling a demurrer to a complaint is waived by defendant pleading over.—Stoneman-Zearing Lumber Co. v. McComb (Ark.) 648.

PLEDGES.

§ 23. Ky. St. § 1908 (Russell's St. § 2102), making charges upon personalty void as to creditors unless accompanied by actual possession in good faith, held to make void attempted pledges of bonds and notes by a bank as security to depositors.—Burnes v. Daviess County Bank & Trust Co.'s Assignee (Ky.) 182; Franke v. Same, Id.

ity to contract to convey land, see Frauds, Statute of, § 116.

§ 21. An agent is competent, unless disqualified for some other reason, to prove the agency.—Griswold v. Haas (Mo. App.) 781.

§ 22. Agency cannot be established by statements of the agent to third parties.—Handlan v. Miller (Mo. App.) 751.

§ 22. Agency cannot be proved by the declarations of the agent to third parties.—Griswold v. Haas (Mo. App.) 781.

§ 23. Evidence held to show that persons who had negotiated for a loan with an association sent trust deeds and notes, executed by them to evidence the loan, to bankers as agents for the association, and not as their own agents.—Cooper v. Commonwealth Trust Co. (Mo. App.) 791.

II. MUTUAL RIGHTS, DUTIES, AND LIABILITIES.

(A) Execution of Agency.

§ 69. The doctrine which forbids an agent to buy from or sell to himself is based on the idea of preventing the commission of fraud.—Meek v. Hurst (Mo.) 1022.

§ 69. A vendor purchasing other property for the purchasers held an agent of the purchasers, so as to be liable to them for a secret profit made by him on the transaction.—Dolinski v. First Nat. Bank (Tex. Civ. App.) 276.

III. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES AS TO THIRD PERSONS.

Effect on limitations of part payment by agent, see Limitation of Actions, § 155.

(A) Powers of Agent.

§ 101. Where the seller of goods acts as the agent of the buyer in shipping the goods, his authority to enter into a limited liability contract with the carrier may be implied from custom or course of dealing.—Lewis v. Imhof (Mo. App.) 329.

§ 101. Where an agent is in actual possession and control of land, his agreement not to hold adversely, during the pendency of a suit, is sufficient to suspend the running of limitations.—Ellwood v. Stallcup (Tex. Civ. App.) 906.

§ 103. An agent for the sale of land has no authority to sell on credit, unless specially authorized to do so.—McKay v. McKinnon (Tex. Civ. App.) 440.

§ 103. A power of attorney to sell for not less than a certain amount per acre held to authorize a sale for cash only.—Lightfoot v. Horst (Tex. Civ. App.) 606.

§ 103. The conveyance of an attorney in fact held to convey no title, being for less and on different terms than authorized by the power of attorney.—Lightfoot v. Horst (Tex. Civ. App.) 606.

§ 105. An agent and attorney in fact of a vendor is authorized to receive and apply as a credit on purchase-money notes in the agent's possession money borrowed by the purchaser and sent to the agent for that purpose.—John M. Bonner Memorial Home v. Collin County Nat. Bank (Tex. Civ. App.) 430.

§ 109. Where an agent with full authority had a note payable to his order to obtain a loan for his principals, and deposited it as collateral security for a loan to himself, the principals' rights as to the note depended upon the his own account, held, that the principal could not plead want of consideration as a basis for recovery against the agent's transferees.—Sublette v. Brewington (Mo. App.) 1150.

§ 122. The authority of an agent held not to be established by his own declarations.—Latham v. First Nat. Bank (Ark.) 992.

§ 123. Evidence held to show that defendant's agent had no authority to contract for the sale of land for part cash with deferred payments.—McKay v. McKinnon (Tex. Civ. App.) 440.

(C) Unauthorized and Wrongful Acts.

§ 147. A person dealing with an agent is bound to ascertain the nature and extent of his authority, and has no right to trust to the mere presumption of authority, nor to the mere assumption thereof by the agent.—Latham v. First Nat. Bank (Ark.) 992.

§ 150. A principal is not bound by the acts and declarations of an agent beyond the scope of his authority.—Latham v. First Nat. Bank (Ark.) 992.

§ 155. A contract for the sale of land which the agent of the vendor had no authority to make held unenforceable by the vendee.—McKay v. McKinnon (Tex. Civ. App.) 440.

(D) Ratification.

§ 163. "Ratification" of unauthorized act, defined.—Gallup v. Liberty County (Tex. Civ. App.) 291.

§ 166. A principal's demand on her agent for notes accepted by him in violation of his instructions, and without authority, held not a ratification of the principal's act in taking the notes.—Morris v. Butler (Mo. App.) 377.

§ 166. Knowledge by principal of agent's unauthorized acts, not to be presumed, and not required to be sought for by him, held essential to ratification.—Lightfoot v. Horst (Tex. Civ. App.) 606.

§ 170. Mere silence held not to prove ratification of agent's unauthorized act.—Lightfoot v. Horst (Tex. Civ. App.) 606.

§ 173. One claiming under ratification of agent's unauthorized acts held to have burden of proof.—Lightfoot v. Horst (Tex. Civ. App.) 606.

§ 173. Evidence held insufficient to show ratification of agent's unauthorized acts.—Lightfoot v. Horst (Tex. Civ. App.) 606.

(D) Injuries to Licensees or Trespassers in General.

§ 273½. A railroad company in possession of freight as warehouseman for delivery to the consignee must exercise ordinary care in guarding the same so as to prevent injury to others.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Fowler (Tex. Civ. App.) 593.

§ 273½. The rule that a carrier need not acquaint itself with the character of goods received for transportation held subject to the exception that it does not apply to dangerous articles, and a carrier receiving dangerous articles must exercise ordinary care to prevent injury to others.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Fowler (Tex. Civ. App.) 593.

(F) Accidents at Crossings.

Previous decisions of courts of state in which cause of action arose as law governing action, see Courts, § 95.

§ 312. Engineer of a train approaching a private road crossing held not bound to look away from the track to see if he can discover approaching travelers above the sides of the cut through which the road runs.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Engleman's Adm'r (Ky.) 833.

§ 312. A railroad is not required to give notice of the approach of trains to a private crossing unless it has been customary for signals to be given which are relied on by persons using the crossing.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Engleman's Adm'r (Ky.) 833.

§ 316. A railroad may run its trains at any speed it pleases over private crossings.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Engleman's Adm'r (Ky.) 833.

§ 327. One having a right to cross a railroad track need not stop to look or listen before crossing, in order to discover whether a train is approaching.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Patrick (Ky.) 820.

§ 335. In an action for the death of a pedestrian at a crossing, evidence held not to show that the railroad was guilty of negligence because it ran its train at a dangerous rate of speed.—Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Chavasse's Adm'r (Ky.) 171.

§ 340. A watchman maintained by a railroad at a crossing held not guilty of negligence in allowing a pedestrian to cross without warning him of the approach of a train.—Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Chavasse's Adm'r (Ky.) 171.

§ 350. In an action for injuries in a crossing accident, whether plaintiff was negligent in standing on one track while a freight train was passing on another held, under the evidence, for the jury.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Patrick (Ky.) 820; Same v. Picklesimer's Adm'r (Ky.) 822.

§ 350. There is no presumption that a person killed at a private railroad crossing is guilty of contributory negligence; that question being for the jury.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Engleman's Adm'r (Ky.) 833.

§ 350. Whether the custom prevails to give signals when trains approach private crossings and people rely on such signals being given in any given case held for the jury.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Engleman's Adm'r (Ky.) 833.

§ 350. In an action for death of a person killed at a private railroad crossing, whether the custom of giving signals for a crossing prevailed to an extent that persons using the crossing could rely on the signals being given held, under the evidence, a question for the jury.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Engleman's Adm'r (Ky.) 833.

§ 351. In an action for injuries at a crossing, an instruction confining the proof of signals of an approaching engine to the ringing of the bell held proper.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Patrick (Ky.) 820; Same v. Picklesimer's Adm'r (Ky.) 822.

§ 351. In an action for death at a crossing, instructions given as to duty to give signals held erroneous.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Engleman's Adm'r (Ky.) 833.

(G) Injuries to Persons on or near Tracks.

§ 360. A railroad need not watch for persons along and near its right of way, but trainmen, becoming aware of the presence of a person on a public road near its track and that his horse is frightened, must desist from making noises frightening the horse, if consistent with their other duties.—Adams v. International & G. N. R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 895.

§ 360. A railroad held liable for injuries caused by trainmen frightening a horse on a public road near the track.—Adams v. International & G. N. R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 895.

§ 360. A railroad held liable for the results of the frightening of horses by unnecessary and unusual whistling or letting off of steam, under circumstances amounting to negligence or willfulness.—Adams v. International & G. N. R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 895.

§ 304. A railroad company held not required to load or inspect its car to prevent coal falling from it on one playing on its grounds near the track.—Covington & C. R. Transfer & Bridge Co. v. Mulvey's Adm'r (Ky.) 129.

§ 397. In an action against a railroad for frightening a horse on a public road, evidence of the habit of the engineer held admissible.—Adams v. International & G. N. R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 895.

§ 397. Where an engineer was charged with negligently operating a train and frightening a horse, held error to permit the engineer to testify that in his experience he did not recall an instance of having frightened a horse.—Adams v. International & G. N. R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 895.

§ 401. A charge in an action for injuries to a person struck by a locomotive held not objectionable on a certain ground.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Reynolds (Tex.) 531.

§ 401. In an action for injuries to a person struck by a switch engine, a charge held erroneous as taking from the jury the question whether the acts of the switching crew on discovering plaintiff's danger were a sufficient exercise of the care required under the circumstances.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Reynolds (Tex.) 531.

§ 401. In an action for injuries to a person struck by a locomotive, a requested charge held erroneous.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Reynolds (Tex.) 531.

(H) Injuries to Animals on or near Tracks.

§ 411. No cause of action exists under Rev. St. 1899, §§ 1105, 2367 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 945, 1649), for the mere failure of a railroad to inclose a tract of land owned by it on one side of its track.—Corcoran v. Wabash R. Co. (Mo. App.) 743.

§ 411. It is the point at which stock injured by a railroad enters the right of way that determines the liability or nonliability of the railroad under Rev. St. 1899, § 1105 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 945), requiring it to fence its right of way, and, in the absence of other proof, the place on the track where the animals were injured will be taken as marking the point of entry.—Corcoran v. Wabash R. Co. (Mo. App.) 743.

§ 411. No liability attaches to a railroad company for failure to put a cattle guard in a place where to do so would endanger the lives or limbs of its employes.—Corcoran v. Wabash R. Co. (Mo. App.) 743.

§ 412. Defendant railroad held liable for injuring stock which passed onto its right of way through a gap in the railroad fence.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Benaist (Tex. Civ. App.) 587.

§ 443. In an action against a carrier of sulphuric acid for injuries caused by the escape of the acid from a car in flowing into the street, evidence held to show that it had notice of the dangerous character of the acid, and that it negligently permitted it to escape.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Fowler (Tex. Civ. App.) 593.

§ 443. Evidence held to show that a carrier was liable to the owner for the loss of the goods, and hence liable to a third person for injuries caused by the goods.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Fowler (Tex. Civ. App.) 593.

§ 446. In an action against a railroad for killing stock, the negligence of the railroad held for the jury.—Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Lowry (Ky.) 128.

§ 446. Where plaintiff showed facts establishing some negligence of the railroad employes, it was for the jury to determine whether the killing of the cattle was due to want of care.—Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Lowry (Ky.) 128.

§ 446. Circumstances under which the issue as to whether a cattle guard placed at a given point outside the limits of a town, but near a station, would be a menace to the safety of train operatives, would be for the court, and under which for the jury, stated.—Corcoran v. Wabash R. Co. (Mo. App.) 743.

(I) Fires.

§ 484. Evidence, in an action against a railroad company for damages from fire, held sufficient to take the case to the jury.—Markt v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 1142.

§ 484. In an action for the destruction of plaintiff's cotton seed in a storage house on defendant's right of way adjoining its cotton platform, evidence held to raise the issue of plaintiff's contributory negligence.—Abbott Gin Co. v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 284.

§ 485. Instruction, in an action against a railroad for loss by fire, held to ignore the rights of a cropper of plaintiff, and that it should have confined recovery to the loss sustained by plaintiff alone.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Couch (Tex. Civ. App.) 67.

RAPE.

I. OFFENSES AND RESPONSIBILITY THEREFOR.

§ 13. Carnal knowledge of a child under the age of consent being itself criminal, in a prosecution therefor, evidence of alleged representations of the child to accused as to her age was properly excluded.—Zachary v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 263.

II. PROSECUTION AND PUNISHMENT.

§ 40. On a trial for rape, the reputation of prosecutrix for chastity is admissible.—Jackson v. State (Ark.) 101.

§ 40. In a prosecution for rape, evidence of lewdness and familiarity, indicating that prosecutrix might have had intercourse with others than accused, held admissible.—Bader v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 555.

§ 48. In a prosecution for rape, the details of prosecutrix's statement to her mother concerning the assault held admissible.—Bader v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 555.

§ 51. Evidence held to show that accused, charged with rape, was not the husband of prosecutrix.—Munger v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 874.

(C) Trial and Review.

Election between acts, see Criminal Law, § 678.

§ 59. On a trial for rape, the failure to make outcry held proper as showing want of resistance.—Jackson v. State (Ark.) 101.

§ 59. On a trial for rape, the refusal to charge on the failure to make immediate complaint accompanied by subsequently treating accused in a friendly manner held erroneous.—Jackson v. State (Ark.) 101.

(D) Sentence and Punishment.

§ 64. Upon conviction of a boy under 17 years old of rape, the punishment is imprisonment for life or for not less than 5 years; the maximum punishment of death, provided by White's Ann. Pen. Code, art. 639, not applying where accused is under 17 years old.—Munger v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 874.

IV. MANAGEMENT AND DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY.

(D) Sale and Conveyance or Redelivery of Property.

§ 139. Facts stated in a motion to vacate a receiver's sale on the ground of collusion, etc., held to require the vacation of the sale, so that it was error to refuse to hear evidence to support the motion.—Dilley v. Jasper Lumber Co. (Tex.) 255.

VI. ACTIONS.

§ 174. An order of the federal court which appointed a receiver for a railroad held to authorize a suit by plaintiff against the receiver for injuries sustained prior to his appointment, regardless of Act Cong. March 3, 1887, c. 373, § 3, 24 Stat. 553, as amended by Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, § 3, 25 Stat. 435 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 510).—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Wynne (Tex. Civ. App.) 50.

§ 183. In a suit against a railroad and its receiver, the allegation of the petition that permission to sue the receiver had been obtained from the court appointing him will be taken as true where not denied by plea under oath, as required by Rev. St. 1895, art. 1265.—Inter-

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

§§ 16, 17. If an injured servant signed a release of a claim for injuries believing it to be a receipt for wages due him, and the question of a settlement was not mentioned at the time, the release was invalid as obtained either by fraud or mistake.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Crutcher (Ky.) 191.

III. PLEADING, EVIDENCE, TRIAL, AND REVIEW.

Right to trial by jury of issue of fraud, see Jury, § 13.

§ 50. A plaintiff claiming that the release pleaded by defendant was fraudulently procured must tender the issue by proper replication, as provided by Rev. St. 1899, § 654 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 670).—Freeman v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo. App.) 1.

§ 52. A reply to an answer pleading settlement of a claim for damages held to properly raise the issue of fraud.—Berry v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo.) 1043.

§ 55. A written release from all claims for personal injuries, signed by plaintiff, made a prima facie defense when introduced in a personal injury action, and the burden was on plaintiff to avoid the release by showing its invalidity.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Crutcher (Ky.) 191.

§ 58. Where the testimony was conflicting as to whether a release was signed under the belief that it was a receipt for wages, as claimed by one party thereto, the question was for the jury.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Crutcher (Ky.) 191.

§ 59. In a switchman's action for injuries by being thrown from a switch engine cab, in which defendant pleaded a release, which plaintiff claimed was signed by him under a misunderstanding, an instruction on the issue held not sufficiently concrete, and that the court should have instructed as stated.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Crutcher (Ky.) 191.

misconstruction of act relating to by trial court as ground of appellate jurisdiction, see Courts, § 231.

II. ORIGIN, NATURE, AND SUBJECT OF CONTROVERSY.

§ 19. Where plaintiff stated a cause of action at common law, error in allowing him to take the benefit of an act of Congress, after the denial of defendant's motion to remove the cause as based on such act, could be corrected on appeal, and did not oust the state court of jurisdiction.—Shohoney v. Quincy, O. & K. C. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1025.

§ 25. Defendant, by a petition to remove to the federal court, cannot change plaintiff's cause of action so as to bring it under a federal law, nor can plaintiff, by stating his cause of action, deprive defendant of his right to remove in a proper case.—Shohoney v. Quincy, O. & K. C. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1025.

VI. PROCEEDINGS TO PROCURE AND EFFECT OF REMOVAL.

§ 81. The right to remove a cause to the federal court held waived.—Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Street (Tex. Civ. App.) 270.

§ 89. Where, on the record made by the filing of a petition and bond for removal, defendant is entitled to removal, its right is preserved for review both by the State Supreme Court and the United States Supreme Court.—Shohoney v. Quincy, O. & K. C. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1025.

§ 95. A federal court's jurisdiction of a removed cause depends on the petition for removal and bond, and not on the order of the state court removing the cause.—Shohoney v. Quincy, O. & K. C. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1025.

VII. REMAND OR DISMISSAL OF CAUSE.

§ 107. An order denying a motion to remand a cause for injuries to a servant based on the federal safety appliance act (Act Cong. March 2, 1893, c. 196, 27 Stat. 531 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3174]) held not res judicata of the question of jurisdiction of a subsequent action in the state court based on defendant's common-law liability.—Shohoney v. Quincy, O. & K. C. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1025.

§ 107. Where a federal court has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter, it cannot be conferred by plaintiff's failure to appeal from an order denying a motion to remand.—Shohoney v. Quincy, O. & K. C. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1025.

§ 71. In replevin for an animal procured from plaintiff through fraudulent representations, certain evidence held admissible to show fraud.—Russell v. Brooks (Ark.) 649.

§ 71. Where, in replevin, the issue was whether plaintiff's property had been procured through the fraud of third persons, certain evidence held inadmissible in the absence of an offer to show that the evidence tended to prove that the third persons had perpetrated a fraud.—Russell v. Brooks (Ark.) 649.

VI. TRIAL, JUDGMENT, ENFORCEMENT OF JUDGMENT, AND REVIEW.

§ 88. Whether an animal sued for in replevin was procured from plaintiff through fraudulent representations and for the felonious purpose of depriving plaintiff of his property held for the jury.—Russell v. Brooks (Ark.) 649.

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY OF CONTRACT.

§ 22. To make a contract of sale, the proposition to sell must be accepted in the very terms of the proposition.—Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. Louisville Cotton Oil Co. (Ky.) 852.

§ 23. To make a contract of sale, the proposition to buy must be accepted in the very terms of the proposition.—Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. Louisville Cotton Oil Co. (Ky.) 852.

§ 23. A binding contract of sale held found on the jury finding that the acceptance of the proposition did not add to the terms of the contract.—Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. Louisville Cotton Oil Co. (Ky.) 852.

II. CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT.

§ 62. A contract for the sale of a clover huller, feeder, and stacker held not divisible, in the sense that the seller was not bound to receive back the stacker and feeder because the huller did not work satisfactorily.—Palmer v. Reeves & Co. (Mo. App.) 1119.

§ 79. An order for coke "f. o. b. Van Buren, Ark." held to sufficiently fix the place of delivery.—Kirchman v. Tuffi Bros. Pig Iron & Coke Co. (Ark.) 239.

§ 82. Where notes were given for the price, and the seller retained a lien, the notes "to be paid as the net earnings of the gin may be able to pay them as per face of the note," such notes became a demand at maturity.—Fuller v. Pryor (Tex. Civ. App.) 418.

III. MODIFICATION OR RESCISSION OF CONTRACT.

(A) By Agreement of Parties.

§ 94. Brokers through whom goods were sold held not liable on an agreement that the goods should be returned to them at a certain place where the goods were destroyed by fire before they were returned there.—Plotner & Stoddard v. Markham Warehouse & Elevator Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 443.

(C) Rescission by Buyer.

§ 114. The buyer of goods who has given drafts for the purchase price could rescind and cancel the contract for fraud in inducing to purchase, notwithstanding a bond indemnifying him against loss under the contract.—Johnson County Sav. Bank v. Renfro (Tex. Civ. App.) 37.

§ 131. Right of buyers to repudiate a transaction within a reasonable time after discovering that the goods do not conform to the contract stated.—Plotner & Stoddard v. Markham Warehouse & Elevator Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 443.

IV. PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT.

(C) Delivery and Acceptance of Goods.

§ 150. In the absence of proof to the contrary, a seller shipping the goods to the buyer must make such a contract with the carrier as will afford the buyer a remedy against the carrier for the full value of the goods in case of their loss.—Lewis v. Imhof (Mo. App.) 329.

§ 150. A seller of goods, who ships the goods by express addressed to the buyer, must show either express or implied authority to ship the goods under a contract limiting the liability of the carrier in case of loss.—Lewis v. Imhof (Mo. App.) 329.

§ 153. A seller held absolved from any further duty to tender or ship the goods after the buyer's notification that he would not accept performance.—Kirchman v. Tuffli Bros. Pig Iron & Coke Co. (Ark.) 239.

§ 161. Where it does not appear that goods shipped were not consigned to shipper's order, nor that the buyer received the goods from the carrier, an executed contract of sale is not shown.—American Jobbing Ass'n v. Wesson (Ark.) 664.

§ 168. If goods bought do not conform to the contract, the buyer will have the right to reject them after fair opportunity to examine them as to their character.—Plotner & Stoddard v. Markham Warehouse & Elevator Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 443.

§ 178. Fact that a part of goods alleged by the buyers not to conform to the contract of sale was, after delivery to the buyers, delivered to their tenants after discovery of the difference would not amount to an acceptance; it appearing that such delivery to the tenants was against the positive orders of the buyers, and a mere mistake.—Plotner & Stoddard v. Markham Warehouse & Elevator Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 443.

§ 179. Where buyers used a portion of goods delivered to them which they claimed did not conform to the contract of sale, they are liable for the portion used.—Plotner & Stoddard v. Markham Warehouse & Elevator Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 443.

§ 181. Where it does not appear that goods shipped were not consigned to shipper's order, nor that the buyer received the goods from the carrier, an executed contract of sale is not shown.—American Jobbing Ass'n v. Wesson (Ark.) 664.

§ 181. In an action for the price of goods bought, certain evidence held admissible.—Plotner & Stoddard v. Markham Warehouse & Elevator Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 443.

§ 182. Whether buyers discovered an alleged variance between the goods delivered and the contract of sale and repudiated the transaction in a reasonable time, under the circumstances, held a question for the jury.—Plotner & Stoddard v. Markham Warehouse & Elevator Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 443.

V. OPERATION AND EFFECT.

(A) Transfer of Title as Between Parties.

§ 201. Where goods are bought without specific instructions as to their shipment, a delivery to the carrier for the buyer held a delivery to the buyer, subject to the right of stoppage in transitu.—Lewis v. Imhof (Mo. App.) 329.

§ 218½. The delivery by the seller to the buyer of the bill of lading held strong presumptive evidence that title has passed to the buyer named as consignee.—F. H. Smith Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Mo. App.) 342.

VI. WARRANTIES.

§ 261. What constitutes an express warranty on the sale of goods stated.—Wertheimer-Swartz Shoe Co. v. McDonald (Mo. App.) 5.

§ 261. A statement by the seller of chattels that his goods are equal in quality to other well-known articles similar in kind held an express warranty.—Wertheimer-Swartz Shoe Co. v. McDonald (Mo. App.) 5.

§ 285. A provision of a machine sale contract, requiring notice of the machine's failure to comply with the warranty by registered letter, held waived.—Palmer v. Reeves & Co. (Mo. App.) 1119.

§ 287. The seller of farm machinery held to have waived a provision in the contract requiring a return of the machine to its agent if not satisfactory.—Palmer v. Reeves & Co. (Mo. App.) 1119.

VII. REMEDIES OF SELLER.

(A) Stoppage in Transitu.

Effect of notice of stoppage in transitu on right of action against creditor and sheriff levying attachment on goods, see Attachment, § 300. Effect of notice of stoppage in transitu on right to interplead in attachment proceedings, see Attachment, § 287.

§ 289. The right of stoppage in transitu is merely an extension of the seller's lien for the payment of the purchase money.—Letts-Spencer Grocer Co. v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 10.

§ 291. The right of stoppage in transitu arises upon the discovery by the seller while the goods are in transit that the buyer is insolvent.—Letts-Spencer Grocer Co. v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 10.

§ 291. Right of stoppage in transitu held to exist where goods are not paid for and buyer is insolvent.—F. H. Smith Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Mo. App.) 342.

§ 291. The refusal of a buyer to honor drafts drawn by the seller for the price is not in itself evidence of insolvency of the buyer essential to justify the seller to exercise his right of stoppage in transitu.—F. H. Smith Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Mo. App.) 342.

§ 294. The seller's right of stoppage in transitu while the goods were still in the carrier's possession could not be impaired by the shipped in the carrier's warehouse does not necessarily prevent the exercise of the right of stoppage in transitu.—Letts-Spencer Grocer Co. v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 10.

§ 296. Time when right of stoppage in transitu must be exercised stated.—F. H. Smith Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Mo. App.) 342.

§ 299. The exercise of the right of stoppage in transitu by the seller vests in each party to the sale the rights he had before the goods were delivered to the carrier.—Letts-Spencer Grocer Co. v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 10.

(E) Actions for Price or Value.

Motion to strike out plea, see Pleading, §§ 352, 354.

Necessity of filing written contract with complaint in justice's court, see Justices of the Peace, § 98.

Pleading inconsistent defenses, see Pleading, § 93.

§ 340. On breach of a buyer's contract of sale before tender or delivery of the goods, the seller cannot recover the price.—Fairbanks, Morse & Co. v. S. W. Heltsley & Co. (Ky.) 198.

§ 340. The remedies of the seller on the refusal of the buyer to receive goods contracted for, determined.—Avant v. Watson (Tex. Civ. App.) 586.

§ 347. Certain acts held to amount to a refusal to abide by an executory contract so as to relieve the buyer from obligation.—American Jobbing Ass'n v. Wesson (Ark.) 664.

§ 359. Evidence in an action to recover the price of goods sold held to sustain judgment for plaintiff.—Phoenix Duster & Mfg. Co. v. Landau Grocery Co. (Mo. App.) 750.

§ 364. In an action to recover the price of goods bought, held, that defendants could not complain of certain charges.—Plotner & Stoddard v. Markham Warehouse & Elevator Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 443.

§ 364. In an action for the price of goods bought, a certain charge held properly refused.—Plotner & Stoddard v. Markham Warehouse & Elevator Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 443.

(F) Actions for Damages.

§ 370. A buyer's repudiation of the contract while the seller is not in default may be treated by the seller as a breach thereof.—Kirchman v. Tuffli Bros. Pig Iron & Coke Co. (Ark.) 239.

§ 377. In an action for a buyer's breach of a contract for the sale of coke, the seller held not required to plead the amount it was prepared to ship, especially in view of Kirby's Dig. § 6133.—Kirchman v. Tuffli Bros. Pig Iron & Coke Co. (Ark.) 239.

§ 377. In an action by a seller for breach of a contract, repudiated by the buyer before time for performance was past, it is not necessary for plaintiff to allege the items of damages suffered.—Kirchman v. Tuffli Bros. Pig Iron & Coke Co. (Ark.) 239.

§ 382. Where a buyer claimed that the coke sold was unsuitable for the purposes for which he purchased it, the seller was entitled to show the character and efficacy of such coke.—Kirchman v. Tuffli Bros. Pig Iron & Coke Co. (Ark.) 239.

§ 383. On the buyer's breach of contract, the seller may recover damages without proof that he had the goods on hand, or tendered them or sold them for less than the contract price.—Phoenix Duster & Mfg. Co. v. Landau Grocery Co. (Mo. App.) 750.

§ 384. For a buyer's breach of contract, the seller may recover the difference between the contract price and the market value of the goods at the time and place of delivery.—Kirchman v. Tuffli Bros. Pig Iron & Coke Co. (Ark.) 239.

§ 384. The market value of goods at a place where there is no market therefor is the value at the nearest market, plus the cost of transportation to the place of delivery.—Kirchman v. Tuffli Bros. Pig Iron & Coke Co. (Ark.) 239.

§ 384. The measure of recovery by a seller suing for damages for the buyer's refusal to receive the goods, determined.—Avant v. Watson (Tex. Civ. App.) 586.

VIII. REMEDIES OF BUYER.

(A) Recovery of Price.

Conformity of findings of court to pleadings and issues, see Trial, § 396.

§ 397. In an action by the buyer of an animal for the price paid, on the ground that the animal shipped by the seller was not the one sold, evidence that the seller did not personally know the fact on which his warranty was founded was competent, so that a finding that he did not know the fact was against the seller.—Wright v. Schultz (Ky.) 138.

§ 397. In an action by the buyer of an animal for the price paid, a finding that the measurements of the animal delivered did not correspond with the measurements of the animal which the seller agreed to deliver held justified by the evidence.—Wright v. Schultz (Ky.) 138.

(C) Actions for Breach of Contract.

§ 406. Where, in an action for breach of contract to deliver lumber sold, it appeared that the seller had no lumber on hand at the time of delivery which it intended to deliver under the contract, the buyer was not bound to inspect and select any lumber in order to sue for the seller's breach.—Kirby Lumber Co. v. C. R. Cummings & Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 273.

§ 418. The buyer's measure of damages for the seller's failure to deliver goods intended for a particular purpose stated.—Kirby Lumber Co. v. C. R. Cummings & Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 273.

§ 420. Where, in an action for breach of a contract of sale, the facts as to the contract and its breach are established by undisputed evidence, there is no question for the jury except the amount of damages.—Kirby Lumber Co. v. C. R. Cummings & Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 273.

(D) Actions and Counterclaims for Breach of Warranty.

Motion to strike out plea of breach of warranty, see Pleading, § 354.

§ 435. In an action for price of goods, special pleas setting up breach of warranty held to be sufficiently certain and definite to state a good defense.—Wertheimer-Swarts Shoe Co. v. McDonald (Mo. App.) 5.

§ 441. Evidence held to require a finding that the machine sold to plaintiff failed to answer the purpose intended.—Palmer v. Reeves & Co. (Mo. App.) 1119.

§ 442. While a representation is only an inducement to the contract of sale, a warranty is a part of the contract; and hence an action for breach of an express warranty is on the contract, and the measure of damages for false representations would not apply.—W. T. Adams Mach. Co. v. Castleberry (Ark.) 998.

§ 442. In an action for a seller's breach of warranty that the machine sold would be as good as similar machinery, the buyer's measure of damages stated.—W. T. Adams Mach. Co. v. Castleberry (Ark.) 998.

§ 442. As a rule, the damages recoverable for a manufacturer's breach of warranty of machinery sold for a known purpose held to include such consequential damages as are the direct and probable result of the breach, including the reasonable expense caused by the defect.—W. T. Adams Mach. Co. v. Castleberry (Ark.) 998.

Mortgage or transfer of property by conditional vendee as larceny, see Larceny, § 15.

§ 479. Acts 1889, p. 117, c. 81, § 1, held to provide two methods of giving notice of resale of personality conditionally sold.—J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. Watson (Tenn.) 86.

§ 479. Acts 1889, p. 117, c. 81, held to require a seller, advertising the property by printed hand bills, to distribute them a reasonable time before the sale.—J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. Watson (Tenn.) 974.

§ 479. Failure to advertise the sale of property sold on condition, on default by the buyer, in the manner provided by Acts 1889, p. 117, c. 81, § 1, held to rescind the contract, so that, under section 4, the seller could not recover the purchase price.—J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. Watson (Tenn.) 86.

§ 11. Graded schools are "common schools."—Jeffries v. Board of Trustees of Columbia Graded Common School (Ky.) 813.

§ 15. The public domain set aside or located for common school purposes cannot be diverted, and constitutes a trust fund for educational purposes for the entire state.—Ellwood v. Stallcup (Tex. Civ. App.) 906.

(B) Creation, Alteration, Existence, and Dissolution of Districts.

Mandamus to compel recognition of district, see Mandamus, §§ 79, 167, 176.

§ 30. Ky. St. 1909, § 4464 (Russell's St. § 5736), when considered in connection with sections 4439, 4481 (sections 5715, 5758) held to require that the 2½-mile boundary of a graded common school district shall be measured from the outer boundary of the site of the school building, providing the site does not exceed one acre.—Clear Spring Distilling Co. v. Board of Trustees of Bardstown Graded Common School Dist. (Ky.) 527.

§ 38. Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 3938, the change of a legally established school district by the county commissioners' court without the consent of a majority of the legal voters thereof was void.—Crow v. Falls (Tex. Civ. App.) 933.

§ 41. Act March 24, 1908 (Laws 1908, p. 133, c. 56), for the government and regulation of the common schools, having been enacted long after judgment was rendered against a school district, it could not affect the judgment creditor's rights or the district's prior liabilities.—Board of Education for Pike County v. A. H. Andrews Co. (Ky.) 207.

§ 41. Act March 24, 1908 (Laws 1908, p. 133, c. 56), for the government and regulation of common schools, held constitutional, though it does not provide for paying debts of districts owing at its adoption.—Board of Education for Pike County v. A. H. Andrews Co. (Ky.) 207.

§ 41. A school district having prior to Act March 24, 1908 (Laws 1908, p. 133, c. 56), created a debt for furniture and used and enjoyed the same, the patrons and property of the district as it stood prior to the act, and not the property of the entire county, should pay it.—Board of Education for Pike County v. A. H. Andrews Co. (Ky.) 207.

Mandamus to county superintendent, see Mandamus, § 76.

Quo warranto to determine right to office of county superintendent, see Quo Warranto, §§ 55, 57.

§ 46. Acts 1895, p. 70, c. 54, amending School Law (Acts 1873, p. 41, c. 25) § 8, relating to the qualifications of a county superintendent of public schools, held mandatory, and not directory.—State v. Evans (Tenn.) 81.

(D) District Property, Contracts, and Liabilities.

§ 65. Under Ky. St. 1909, § 4484 (Russell's St. § 5762), held that school trustees could convey certain lands held by them for school purposes.—Jeffries v. Board of Trustees of Columbia Graded Common School (Ky.) 813.

§ 65. The discretion of trustees elected upon the establishment of a graded common school district, as to buying a particular property for the school, which property the petition for election specified should be procured if expedient, will not be interfered with by the courts, at least in the absence of such proofs of abuse as would be tantamount to fraud.—Jeffries v. Board of Trustees of Columbia Graded Common School (Ky.) 813.

§ 67. Rev. St. 1890, § 9865 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4523), held to authorize the board of a district organization under chapter 154, art. 2, to build additions to a primary school building when the necessities of the district do not demand a division of the district into ward schools, but prohibits the erection of more than one primary school building on one school site.—Martin v. Bennett (Mo. App.) 779.

though it is void.—Bornstein v. Louisville School Board (Ky.) 522.

(E) District Debt, Securities, and Taxation.

§ 97. A demurrer to a petition to have an election as to whether a school district should issue and sell bonds for erecting a schoolhouse declared void, and to prevent the issue of the bonds, held properly sustained.—Rees v. Wilson (Ky.) 510.

§ 97. Rev. St. 1899, § 9752, and section 9752a as added by Laws 1903, p. 266 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 4472, 4473), relating to the submission to the people of propositions to borrow money for school purposes, construed.—State ex rel. School Dist. of Memphis v. Gordon (Mo.) 1008.

§ 97. A proposition submitting to the people the question of incurring an indebtedness for school purposes, under Rev. St. 1899, § 9752, and section 9752a as added by Laws 1903, p. 266 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 4472, 4473), held not to embrace more than one subject, in violation of Const. art. 4, § 28 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 185), by analogy.—State ex rel. School Dist. of Memphis v. Gordon (Mo.) 1008.

§ 97. Under Laws 1903, p. 266 (Ann. St. 1906, § 9752a), a school board authorized by the voters of a district to purchase a site to erect a new schoolhouse held not authorized to use the money from the sale of bonds to erect a new schoolhouse on the old site.—Martin v. Bennett (Mo. App.) 779.

§ 97. An order of the board of directors of a city school district providing for the submission of the question of borrowing money to an election held insufficient for failing to specify the place of the election.—Martin v. Bennett (Mo. App.) 779.

§ 103. Under Act March 24, 1908 (Acts 1908, p. 133, c. 56), in effect re-enacting Ky. St. 1909, § 4467 (Russell's St. § 5739), relating to voting upon the establishing of a graded public common school and a tax to maintain it, held, that the vote on the question of tax is to be viva voce.—Jeffries v. Board of Trustees of Columbia Graded Common School (Ky.) 813.

§ 103. The participation of a judge substituted for one appointed at a school election under Act March 24, 1908 (Acts 1908, p. 133, c. 56), re-enacting in effect Ky. St. 1909, § 4467 (Russell's St. § 5739), held at most a harmless irregularity.—Jeffries v. Board of Trustees of Columbia Graded Common School (Ky.) 813.

§ 103. A petition for an election on the question of establishing a graded common school under Ky. St. 1909, §§ 4464, 4481 (Russell's St. §§ 5736, 5758) construed.—Jeffries v. Board of Trustees of Columbia Graded Common School (Ky.) 813.

§ 103. A petition for an election on the question of establishing a graded common school held to sufficiently designate the location of the schoolhouse under Ky. St. 1909, § 4464 (Russell's St. § 5736).—Jeffries v. Board of Trustees of Columbia Graded Common School (Ky.) 813.

§ 111. A taxpayer held entitled to maintain an action as such to prevent the waste of the public school fund, or to prevent the school board from making a building contract with one of its own members in violation of law.—Bornstein v. Louisville School Board (Ky.) 522.

§ 111. In an action to enjoin the construction of a school building on the ground that the contract was in fact made with a member of name.—Bornstein v. Louisville School Board (Ky.) 522.

§ 111. The liabilities of the real and nominal contractors stated, where a contract to erect a school building is declared void, as being in fact made with a member of the school board in violation of Ky. St. §§ 2975, 2976 (Russell's St. §§ 854, 855), and where the building has been accepted by the school board, and the whole or a part of the contract price paid to the nominal contractor.—Bornstein v. Louisville School Board (Ky.) 522.

§ 111. Taxpaying citizens of a city school district may sue to restrain the school board from levying taxes to pay interest on illegal school district bonds.—Martin v. Bennett (Mo. App.) 779.

I. ENACTMENT, REQUISITES, AND VALIDITY IN GENERAL.

§ 47. Courts should not make a mere guess at the legislative intention in order to uphold and enforce a statute, where it is so uncertain as not to be susceptible of reasonable interpretation.—Beaumont Traction Co. v. State (Tex. Civ. App.) 615, 618.

§ 61. The court held required to presume that the Legislature, in passing a local or special law, complied with Const. art. 3, § 57, and Rev. St. 1895, art. 3260, relating to notice of intention to apply for the passage of a local or special act.—Cravens v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 29.

§ 64. Act No. 247, p. 568, Acts 1907, held constitutional in so far as it provides for the formation of part of a county into a district for the improvement of roads already constructed, though invalid in authorizing the formation of the entire county into a district for the construction of new roads.—Parkview Land Co. v. Road Improvement Dist. No. 1 of Jefferson County (Ark.) 241.

§ 64. Even if Sp. Laws 1905, p. 87, c. 6, § 252, be invalid in part, held that the remainder, complete in itself, must be sustained.—Sturgeon v. City of Parish (Tex. Civ. App.) 967.

II. GENERAL AND SPECIAL OR LOCAL LAWS.

§ 93. Laws governing cities of the first class held general laws within the Constitution, though they apply in fact to one city.—Specht v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 846.

§ 93. Acts 30th Leg. (Laws 1907, p. 177) c. 88, fixing the compensation of county attorneys in cities having a designated population, held not a local or special law, within Const. art. 3, § 56, but is a valid law, within article 11, § 5, permitting the amendment of charters of cities of a specified size by special act.—Cravens v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 29.

III. SUBJECTS AND TITLES OF ACTS.

§ 105. Const. art. 4, § 28 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 185), relating to the titles and subjects of statutes, held to be liberally interpreted.—State ex rel. School Dist. of Memphis v. Gordon (Mo.) 1008.

§ 105. A liberal construction will be given an act, in determining whether or not it violates Const. art. 3, § 35, relating to the subject and title of acts.—Brown v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 565.

§ 107. In applying the constitutional provision against doubletess, each case is singular to itself, and will stand or fall on its own facts.

IV. AMENDMENT, REVISION, AND CODIFICATION.

§ 138. Gen. Laws Sp. Sess. 1897, p. 16, c. 9, relating to the venue in prosecutions for rape, is valid, without reciting or referring to any other act, as required by Const. art. 3, § 36, on revival or amendment of an act.—Brown v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 565.

(A) General Rules of Construction.

Laws relating to issuance of license for sale of liquors, see Intoxicating Liquors, § 69.

Laws relating to qualifications of county school superintendent, see Schools and School Districts, § 46.

§ 181. The letter of the statute must give way somewhat to its obvious intentment, and it should not be construed so as to unnecessarily cause unreasonable results, or impute injustice to the Legislature.—Rutter v. Carothers (Mo.) 1056.

§ 181. A statute must be so construed as to carry out the manifest intent of the Legislature so as to avoid an absurd result.—Fruin v. Meredith (Mo. App.) 1107.

§ 190. The doctrine of practical construction cannot be applied unless the language of the statute is so ambiguous as to leave the judicial mind in doubt.—Commonwealth v. Ross (Ky.) 161.

§ 197. The word "or," in Acts 1880, p. 117, c. 81, relating to sale on default of property conditionally sold, held to authorize sale in either of two methods.—J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. Watson (Tenn.) 974.

§ 200. In interpreting Acts 1880, p. 117, c. 81, providing that a conditional seller on regaining possession, shall advertise the property for sale "by printed hand bills or written or printed notices," the court may properly insert comma after "printed hand bills."—J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. Watson (Tenn.) 974.

§ 206. A statute must be so construed as to give every part of it effect.—Fruin v. Meredith (Mo. App.) 1107.

§ 206. A statute should be construed so as to give effect to every part of it, and at the same time avoid absurd conditions.—J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. Watson (Tenn.) 974.

§ 215. Contemporaneous construction will not be applied where it will defeat the legislative intent.—Commonwealth v. Ross (Ky.) 161.

I. NATURE AND EXTENT OF POWER IN GENERAL.

§ 7. United States bonds are not subject to state taxation.—First Nat. Bank v. Board of Equalization of Independence County (Ark.) 988.

§ 10. Rev. St. U. S. §§ 5214, 5219 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 3500, 3502), held to limit the power of the state to tax national banks, and to limit the power of taxation to the shares of stock and real estate.—First Nat. Bank v. Board of Equalization of Independence County (Ark.) 988.

§ 11. A state may tax shares of stock in a national bank without regard to the fact that a part or the whole of the capital stock of the banks is invested in nontaxable bonds.—First Nat. Bank v. Board of Equalization of Independence County (Ark.) 988.

§ 12. Kirby's Dig. §§ 6902, 6919-6924, held to provide for the taxation of shares of stock of national banks, and not their capital, and hence to meet the requirements of Rev. St. U. S. § 5219 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3502).—First Nat. Bank v. Board of Equalization of Independence County (Ark.) 988.

§ 12. A national bank held not discriminated against in the manner of assessing the shares of its stock.—First Nat. Bank v. Board of Equalization of Independence County (Ark.) 988.

II. CONSTITUTIONAL REQUIREMENTS AND RESTRICTIONS.

§ 45. Under Ky. St. 1909, §§ 4077, 4082 (Russell's St. §§ 6050, 6055), the tax on a franchise of a gas company held a property tax on intangible property within Const. § 174, and not a privilege tax for engaging in a business that natural persons could not.—Commonwealth v. Louisville Gas Co. (Ky.) 164.

§ 45. Under Ky. St. 1909, §§ 4077, 4082 (Russell's St. §§ 6050, 6055), and Const. § 174, a tax on a franchise of a gas company held not a privilege tax imposed on the right to be a corporation.—Commonwealth v. Louisville Gas Co. (Ky.) 164.

§ 45. An assessment of intangible property of a railroad situated in a county held to violate Const. art. 8, § 1, requiring equality and uniformity of taxation.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Kone (Tex. Civ. App.) 424.

III. LIABILITY OF PERSONS AND PROPERTY.

(B) Corporations and Corporate Stock and Property.

§ 122. Under Ky. St. 1909, §§ 4077, 4082 (Russell's St. §§ 6050, 6055), stockholders of a corporation held not required to list their shares in the company for taxation.—Commonwealth v. Louisville Gas Co. (Ky.) 164.

§ 122. Under Ky. St. 1909, §§ 4077, 4082 (Russell's St. §§ 6050, 6055), a gas company holding shares in an electric company held not assessable on its shares.—Commonwealth v. Louisville Gas Co. (Ky.) 164.

(D) Exemptions.

§ 217. The city hall of the city of Louisville held exempt from taxation under Const. § 170.—Schwalk's Adm'r v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 860.

IV. PLACE OF TAXATION.

§ 254. In a proceeding to require personality to be listed for taxation in a certain county on the ground that the owner was there domiciled, evidence held to show that she was a resident of another county.—Helm's Trustee v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 196.

V. LEVY AND ASSESSMENT.

(D) Mode of Assessment of Corporate Stock, Property, or Receipts.

§ 376. Under Ky. St. 1909, §§ 4077, 4082 (Russell's St. §§ 6050, 6055), held, that the bonds of an electric company owned by a gas company were to be computed in determining the value of the latter's franchise.—Commonwealth v. Louisville Gas Co. (Ky.) 164.

§ 391. Acts 1897, p. 102, c. 5, held to divide for taxation railroad property into localized and distributable property, and switch and industrial tracks off the main right of way, but used as a part of the general system, must be assessed as distributable property.—Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Patterson (Tenn.) 467.

§ 391. An assessment of certain railroad property held void, under Acts 1897, p. 102, c. 5, and no tax could be collected thereon.—Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Patterson (Tenn.) 467.

§ 406. Under Ky. St. 1909, §§ 4077, 4082 (Russell's St. §§ 6050, 6055), the burden of proof in a proceeding to assess omitted property held on the state to show that the bonds of an electric company held by a gas company were omitted from the latter's report of its taxable property.—Commonwealth v. Louisville Gas Co. (Ky.) 164.

§ 406. Under Ky. St. 1909, §§ 4077, 4082 (Russell's St. §§ 6050, 6055), bonds of an electric company held by a gas company held not to be omitted from the report by the gas company of its property for taxation.—Commonwealth v. Louisville Gas Co. (Ky.) 164.

VII. PAYMENT AND REFUNDING OR RECOVERY OF TAX PAID.

Nonpayment of franchise tax as affecting right of corporation to defend action against it, see Corporations, § 499.

§ 527. A bank held liable only for the difference between the unlawful tax paid and the tax which it should have paid.—City of Columbus v. Bank of Columbus (Ky.) 835.

§ 528. Where a city could not legally demand a franchise tax until after the commencement of the action therefor, by the passage of an ordinance authorizing it, interest on the tax before judgment is not recoverable.—City of Columbus v. Bank of Columbus (Ky.) 835.

VIII. COLLECTION AND ENFORCEMENT AGAINST PERSONS OR PERSONAL PROPERTY.

(A) Collectors and Proceedings for Collection in General.

§ 545. Ky. St. 1909, § 2098 (Russell's St. § 947), relating to the enforcement of unpaid tax bills, held not invalid.—Specht v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 846.

(B) Summary Remedies and Actions.

§ 593. The levy of a tax by the proper authorities is presumed to be legal and correct, and the burden of proving its illegality is on the person resisting it.—City of Columbus v. Bank of Columbus (Ky.) 835.

IX. SALE OF LAND FOR NONPAYMENT OF TAX.

Enforcement of lien for levee taxes, see Levees, § 27.

§ 630. Under Kirby's Dig. § 7085, requiring the delinquent tax list to be published weekly for two weeks, "weekly for two weeks" means two weeks in succession, and a biweekly publication did not comply with the statute.—Byrne v. Less (Ark.) 635.

§ 630. Failure to publish the delinquent tax list weekly for two weeks, as required by Kirby's Dig. § 7085, held to render the tax sale void.—Byrne v. Less (Ark.) 635.

XI. TAX TITLES.

(B) Tax Deeds.

§ 776. In ejectment, a deed from the Commissioner of State Lands held to convey land

(C) Actions to Confirm or Try Title.

§ 805. The possession of land under a tax deed is not adverse to the owner during the two years within which the land may be redeemed.—Bledsoe v. Haney (Tex. Civ. App.) 455.

(D) Rights and Remedies of Purchaser of Invalid Title.

§ 827. An admission by plaintiff in an action to enforce a lien for taxes that the sale was void held to justify a finding that the sale was void necessary to support a decree enforcing the lien under Kirby's Dig. § 7112.—Caruthers v. Greer (Ark.) 629.

§ 827. In a suit by the assignee of a purchaser at a tax sale to impose a lien on the land for taxes paid, whether the sale was valid or invalid held immaterial to defendants.—Caruthers v. Greer (Ark.) 629.

§ 829. Purchaser's right to recover taxes on the adjudication of the invalidity of a tax sale (Act July 23, 1868 [Acts 1868, p. 281] § 72; Acts 1883, p. 275, § 152) extends to the purchaser's grantees.—Caruthers v. Greer (Ark.) 629.

§ 833. An adjudication of the invalidity of a tax sale is a condition precedent to a purchaser's right to recover taxes paid under Kirby's Dig. § 7112.—Caruthers v. Greer (Ark.) 629.

XII. FORFEITURES AND PENALTIES.

Statute imposing penalty as violation of usury laws, see Usury, § 16.

§ 840. A bank held not liable for a penalty for nonpayment of a franchise tax, where it had paid a personal property tax.—City of Columbus v. Bank of Columbus (Ky.) 835.

§ 33. The words "business service," in a telegram company's franchise fixing rates, do not include service rendered to a telegram company under a joint traffic arrangement.—East Tennessee Telephone Co. v. City of Harrodsburg (Ky.) 126.

§ 37. Telegraph company held not liable for failure to deliver at the sender's residence, seven miles in the country.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Shockley (Tex. Civ. App.) 945.

§ 38. In an action against a telegram company for negligently delaying the delivery of a message, evidence held to authorize a recovery.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. McDonald (Tex. Civ. App.) 618.

§ 54. A stipulation on the reverse side of a message that the initial telegraph company would not be liable for negligent transmission or delivery beyond its own line held unavailable to the initial company as a defense for the negligent acts of the connecting company.—Postal Telegraph Cable Co. of Texas v. Harriass (Tex. Civ. App.) 891.

§ 66. Evidence held to authorize a finding of negligence in failing to deliver a telegram.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Griffin (Ark.) 489.

§ 67. Where a message relates to a commercial business, the telegraph company has notice of any actual damages that may result from its negligence.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Askew (Ark.) 107.

§ 67. Where a message on its face furnished to a person of ordinary prudence notice that it was important, and its prompt delivery essential, or where the telegraph company or its operator receiving it had notice of its importance, special damages were recoverable for the failure to promptly transmit or deliver it.—Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. Louisville Cotton Oil Co. (Ky.) 852.

§ 67. A telegraph company negligently delaying the delivery of a message held liable for special damages, where it had notice of the importance of the message, though it is unintelligible.—Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. Louisville Cotton Oil Co. (Ky.) 852.

§ 67. A telegraph company held not liable for any damage that it could not reasonably know or contemplate, when it received a message, would follow from its failure to transmit and deliver it with reasonable diligence.—Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. Louisville Cotton Oil Co. (Ky.) 852.

§ 67. A telegram held to sufficiently notify defendant telegraph company's agents that damages might result from its nondelivery.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Williams (Tex. Civ. App.) 280.

§ 68. A telegram announcing a death held to put the company on notice that the funeral would be postponed on a reasonable time.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Griffin (Ark.) 489.

§ 68. The relation of son-in-law of the sender of a telegram to the addressee held sufficient to sustain an action for mental anguish for nondelivery of the message announcing death of the sender's wife.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Griffin (Ark.) 489.

§ 68. Prolongation of anxiety on delivery of a message informing a daughter of her father's fatal illness held not a basis of damages.—Goodhue v. Western Union Telegraph Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 41.

§ 70. In an action for the erroneous transmission of a message by which plaintiff failed to make a contract, the measure of plaintiff's damages was the difference between the contract price and the value of the goods purchased when they should have been delivered.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Askew (Ark.) 107.

§ 71. In an action against a telegraph company for negligent mistake in transmitting a death message, a verdict of $450 for mental anguish held not excessive.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Taylor (Ky.) 131.

§ 73. Where a telegraph company denies that it had notice of the importance of a message, and the evidence on the issue is in doubt, the question is for the jury.—Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. Louisville Cotton Oil Co. (Ky.) 852.

II. ACTIONS.

(A) Right of Action and Defenses.

§ 20. A party in possession of land may recover in an action for trespass thereto.—Deaderick v. State (Tenn.) 975.

§ 30. The buyer of timber, who goes over the line and cuts timber on adjoining land, is alone responsible therefor, and the seller is not liable where it does not appear that he was responsible for the buyer's mistaking the boundary or authorized the cutting.—Stoneman-Zearing Lumber Co. v. McComb (Ark.) 648.

(B) Jurisdiction, Parties, Preliminary Proceedings, and Pleading.

§ 40. In an action for cutting and removing timber from several tracts of land, it is not essential to a statement of the cause of action to set forth a description and value of the timber cut on each tract.—Stoneman-Zearing Lumber Co. v. McComb (Ark.) 648.

(C) Evidence.

§ 44. In an action for cutting and removing timber on plaintiff's land, the burden of proof is on him to show that defendant cut the timber, and the quantity and value of the timber cut.—Stoneman-Zearing Lumber Co. v. McComb (Ark.) 648.

§ 46. In an action for cutting and removing timber, proof that some of it was cut by defendant was insufficient to charge it with responsibility for all the timber missing from plaintiff's land during an indefinite period of two or three years.—Stoneman-Zearing Lumber Co. v. McComb (Ark.) 648.

(E) Trial, Judgment, and Review.

§ 67. In an action for injury to plaintiff's wife from fright and humiliation caused by defendant's agents going upon plaintiff's premises in the nighttime, held error to direct a verdict for defendant.—Alexander v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 572.

III. CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY.

§ 78. Possession by occupation or inclosure of part of land covered by title papers held possession of the entire boundaries described therein, within Shannon's Code, § 6496, subd. 7.—Deaderick v. State (Tenn.) 975.

§ 84. In a prosecution for malicious mischief, in violation of Shannon's Code, § 6496, it was no defense that defendant's employers had a better title to the land in question than prosecutor.—Deaderick v. State (Tenn.) 975.

TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE.

See Ejectment.

to try title, had prior possession of the land, plaintiffs need not connect themselves with the sovereign of the soil.—Stephenville Oil Mill Co. v. McNeill (Tex. Civ. App.) 911.

Restraining inclosure of land and removal of timber pending action, see Injunction, § 7.

§ 25. It is not essential to a recovery of land by force of a prior possession that the action be brought within a reasonable time after eviction.—Saxton v. Corbett (Tex. Civ. App.) 75.

§ 25. Unreasonable delay in bringing a suit to try title based on prior possession held no bar to the action, but relevant to the question of abandonment.—Saxton v. Corbett (Tex. Civ. App.) 75.

§ 35. In trespass to try title, plaintiff held not bound by the date of the eviction pleaded, but entitled to prove that he was evicted on an earlier date.—Saxton v. Corbett (Tex. Civ. App.) 75.

§ 40. In trespass to try title, in which both parties claimed through deeds from N., a certified copy of the deed from N.'s grantee, through whom plaintiffs claimed, to another, held not inadmissible because it referred to a prior grant for a fuller description, and recited that it was acquired by the grantor by deed from N.—Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Kimball (Tex.) 533.

§ 41. Where plaintiff claimed certain land by prior possession, he was also entitled to show that one of the links in defendant's chain of title was insufficient without defeating his own prima facie right based on possession.—Saxton v. Corbett (Tex. Civ. App.) 75.

§ 41. Proof of a patent to a third person held not to preclude plaintiff's recovery on prior possession.—Saxton v. Corbett (Tex. Civ. App.) 75.

§ 44. Evidence held to justify the refusal to direct a verdict for defendant.—Walker v. Corbett (Ky.) 841.

§ 44. The direction of a verdict for plaintiff held error under the evidence.—Thacker v. Wilson (Tex. Civ. App.) 938.

§ 45. In trespass to try title, an instruction held not objectionable as a charge that defendants as a matter of law were entitled to judgment for the half of the tract claimed by them.—Saxton v. Corbett (Tex. Civ. App.) 75.

§ 11. A suit to foreclose a vendor's lien held properly transferred to the law docket under Civ. Code Prac. § 12, for the determination of the amount due.—Landrum & Adams v. Wells (Ky.) 213.

III. COURSE AND CONDUCT OF TRIAL IN GENERAL.

§ 25. In an action for injuries to a street car passenger, plaintiff held to have the burden of proof notwithstanding defendant's offer to confess judgment giving him the right to open and close.—Lexington Ry. Co. v. Johnson (Ky.) 830.

§ 25. A rule as to the right to open and close argument of trial, stated.—Reis v. Eperson (Mo. App.) 353.

§ 29. Where counsel offered a part of the testimony of a witness on a former trial to show contradictions of his testimony at the present trial, it was not error for the trial judge to remark that counsel should have treated the witness fairly by reading the alleged contradictory statement to him, and asking him if he made it.—Steltemeier v. Barrett (Mo. App.) 1095.

IV. RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE.

(A) Introduction, Offer, and Admission of Evidence in General.

§ 56. In an action by plaintiff to recover for injuries in a railroad wreck, the exclusion of the depositions of two physicians who assisted the principal physician in the examination and treatment of plaintiff at a hospital held not sustainable on the ground that the evidence was merely cumulative.—Epstein v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (Mo. App.) 366.

(B) Order of Proof, Rebuttal, and Re-opening Case.

§ 60. In an action on a note given for the price of corporate stock, defended on the ground of false representations as to the value of the stock, it is proper for the court to admit, in the first instance, evidence that third persons made false representations, and then admit evidence connecting plaintiff therewith.—Wise-garver v. Yinger (Tex. Civ. App.) 925.

(C) Objections, Motions to Strike Out, and Exceptions.

§ 84. Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 2312, a certified copy of a deed held admissible and prima facie evidence of its execution by the grantor therein, where the objections to its admissibility permitted by the statute were not taken or urged when it was offered.—Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Kimball (Tex.) 533.

§ 85. An objection to all of the testimony of a witness will be disregarded where a part of it is admissible.—Wells v. Hobbs (Tex. Civ. App.) 451.

§ 98. Rulings of a court should be so definite in character as to leave no room for doubt by the jury as to what evidence is admitted and what excluded.—Gardner v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1068.

§ 105. The court must declare the correct rule as to the remedy, although evidence received without objection should have been excluded on objection.—Pratt v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 1125.

§ 105. Defendant could disprove the execution of the deed under which plaintiffs claimed in trespass to try title, so as to overcome the prima facie case made by the introduction of a certified copy, though he did not object to the copy for want of proof of the execution of the original.—Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Kimball (Tex.) 533.

V. ARGUMENTS AND CONDUCT OF COUNSEL.

§ 122. Allusions of counsel in argument held not improper.—Kettler Brass Mfg. Co. v. O'Neil (Tex. Civ. App.) 900.

§ 120. In an action for injuries to a passenger, the railroad held not entitled to complain of the improper argument of plaintiff's counsel made in reply to remarks of counsel for the defense.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Sandlin (Tex. Civ. App.) 60.

§ 133. Improper argument of counsel in an action for injuries to a passenger by the derailment of a train held not ground for reversal.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Sandlin (Tex. Civ. App.) 60.

§ 139. A demurrer to testimony should not be sustained if it is so strong that fair-minded men may differ as to the issue.—Rose v. Mayes (Mo. App.) 769.

§ 139. Unless the evidence is so conclusively one way that there is no room for reasonable minds to differ as to the conclusion to be reached, the trial judge should not direct a verdict.—Alexander v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 572.

§ 139. Where there is any evidence supporting an issue properly pleaded, it is for the jury.—Avant v. Watson (Tex. Civ. App.) 962.

§ 139. The weight of the testimony is for the jury.—Buchanan v. Rollings (Tex. Civ. App.) 962.

§ 140. Facts indicating that plaintiff's witnesses were unworthy of belief were for the jury's consideration alone.—City of Louisville v. Tompkins (Ky.) 174.

§ 140. It is a question for the jury whether the testimony of a party is to be believed.—Markt v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 1142.

§ 140. The credibility of witnesses is for the jury.—Buchanan v. Rollings (Tex. Civ. App.) 962.

§ 141. Where the essential facts are established by undisputed evidence, there is no question for the jury.—Kirby Lumber Co. v. C. R. Cummings & Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 273.

§ 143. The jury must weigh conflicting evidence and determine its probative force.—Mor- vidence, and then finding for defendant on an equity count, and setting aside the verdict for plaintiff on a count at law, held not incongruous.—Warner v. Michel (Mo. App.) 338.

(A) Province of Court and Jury in General.

§ 187. The credibility of witnesses and the weight to be given testimony are for the jury.—Smith v. Fears (Tex. Civ. App.) 433.

§ 191. In an action on an indemnity policy, a charge held erroneous.—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Chew (Ark.) 642.

§ 191. There being evidence to show that there were many other duties besides sampling cotton in the vocation of cotton factor, a charge in an action on an indemnity policy by an insured giving his occupation as a cotton factor held erroneous as assuming that insured was totally disabled by reason of his inability to sample cotton.—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Chew (Ark.) 642.

§ 191. In an action for injuries to a section hand struck by a train, an instruction given under the assumption that plaintiff had no knowledge of the near approach of the train and of his peril held erroneous.—Williamson v. Wabash R. Co. (Mo. App.) 1113.

§ 192. In trespass to try title, held not error to assume that possession was adverse.—Washam v. Harrison (Tex. Civ. App.) 52.

§ 192. In trespass to try title to land claimed by 10 years' adverse possession, where the undisputed evidence showed that plaintiff had improvements on, and held possession of, the rear part of the lot, it was not error for the court to state such fact to the jury.—Washam v. Harrison (Tex. Civ. App.) 52.

§ 192. The court in its instruction may assume a fact conclusively established by the evidence.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Sandlin (Tex. Civ. App.) 60.

§ 193. An instruction which indicated to the jury the court's opinion as to the effect of certain evidence on plaintiff's case was improper.—Pennington v. Thompson Bros. Lumber Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 923.

§ 194. A charge on the weight of the evidence is properly refused.—Buckley v. Runge (Tex. Civ. App.) 596.

(B) Necessity and Subject-Matter.

§ 211. In an action by an administrator on a note, a requested instruction that, as defendant could not testify to any transaction with decedent showing payment, his failure to explain any matter connected with its payment should not be considered against him, was properly refused as prejudicing the other party for exercising a lawful right, and was not authorized by Rev. St. 1899, § 4652 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2520).—Steltemeier v. Barrett (Mo. App.) 1095.

(C) Form, Requisites, and Sufficiency.

§ 233. To avoid the probability of misleading the jury, they should not be instructed that all other issues raised by the pleadings, other than those submitted, are withdrawn from their consideration.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Graves (Tex. Civ. App.) 458.

§ 237. An instruction as to preponderance of testimony held sufficient.—Handlan v. Miller (Mo. App.) 751.

§ 243. An instruction held erroneous as contradictory.—Gardner v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1068.

§ 244. The rule that it is not proper to point out particular evidence in an instruction or to give undue prominence to any fact applies to parol evidence, and not to written evidence of a contract.—Offutt & Blackburn v. Doyle (Ky.) 156.

§ 244. In an action on a note executed to a decedent in which defendant pleaded payment and produced several receipts acknowledging payment for money advanced, a requested instruction that the production of the receipts signed by decedent was a complete defense, unless overcome by proof showing that the payments were in fact made, held properly refused as unduly commenting on the effect of the receipts as evidence.—Steltemeier v. Barrett (Mo. App.) 1095.

(D) Applicability to Pleadings and Evidence.

§ 251. Where the defense of assumption of risk is not pleaded, the court should not submit such issue.—Lewis v. Texas & P. Ry. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 605.

§ 252. Where a written contract between the parties to an action is set up or relied on in the pleadings, or is introduced in the evidence, the court should instruct thereon, notwithstanding evidence of fraud, want of consideration, or mistake.—Offutt & Blackburn v. Doyle (Ky.) 156.

§ 252. In an action for injury to a passenger from being shot by a trainman, there being no question of negligence, an instruction on the theory of negligence held erroneous.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Gunterman (Ky.) 514.

§ 252. In an action for death at a crossing, instructions given held erroneous as not based on evidence.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Engleman's Admr (Ky.) 833.

§ 252. Where, in trespass to try title, there was no evidence that the tenants of defendant's grantor held possession of the land for three years, there was no error in not submitting the question of possession of such tenants in a charge upon the three year limitations as to such grantor.—Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Kimball (Tex.) 533.

§ 252. A requested charge, in a servant's injury action, to reject testimony as to the defective condition of machinery, was properly refused where there was no evidence of any defects in the machinery.—Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Sanchez (Tex. Civ. App.) 44.

§ 253. In an action for injuries from the fowling of land, an instruction on the measure of damages held erroneous.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Haynes (Ky.) 210.

(E) Requests or Prayers.

§ 255. Failure to charge on one of the grounds on which plaintiff sought to recover, in the absence of a request, is not error.—Abbott Gin Co. v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 284.

§ 256. One cannot complain of an instruction which allows the jury to interpret the expression "carelessly and negligently," in the absence of a request for a more specific instruction.—Rippetoe v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 314.

§ 256. A charge, in trespass for cutting timber, relating to the care of a prudent person, held not erroneous for failing to annex the qualifying word "ordinarily."—Clevenger v. Blount (Tex.) 529.

§ 256. It is not compulsory upon the judge to set out any more of the pleadings in his charge than he may deem necessary, and it is the duty of a party, if dissatisfied with the charge, to have prepared and presented a special charge covering the supposed defect, and, if he does not do so, he cannot complain.—Estes v. Estes (Tex. Civ. App.) 304.

§ 256. Defendant held not entitled to complain of a charge correct as far as it went, because it was based on one state of facts, when there were other facts in evidence presenting another theory making up a part of the defense.—Beaumont Traction Co. v. Happ (Tex. Civ. App.) 610.

§ 256. Complaint cannot be made that an instruction did not impose a sufficiently high degree of care on a carrier, in the absence of a special request for the instruction desired.—Williamson v. Chicago, R. I. & G. Ry. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 897.

§ 256. Where a charge given is correct so far as it goes, if a party desires fuller instructions upon the subject, they must be asked for.—J. T. Stark Grain Co. v. Harry Bros. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 947.

§ 260. A requested charge, substantially covered by the instructions given, may be properly refused.—Rippetoe v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 314; Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Street (Tex. Civ. App.) 270; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Graves (Tex. Civ. App.) 458; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Hood (Tex. Civ. App.) 569; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Plummer (Tex. Civ. App.) 942; Palo Duro Club v. McAllister (Tex. Civ. App.) 971.

§ 260. Where the defenses of contributory negligence and assumed risk were clearly prechcz (Tex. Civ. App.) 44.

§ 260. Where the jury were correctly instructed as to defendant's duty to provide means for use by passengers in alighting, it was not error to refuse a special charge to the same effect.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Dunbar (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

§ 260. Where a clause in the general charge correctly submitted an issue, a special charge submitting the same issue was properly refused.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Dunbar (Tex. Civ. App.) 574.

§ 260. An instruction as to the burden of proof as to contributory negligence held sufficient.—Beaumont Traction Co. v. Happ (Tex. Civ. App.) 610.

§ 261. Requested instructions based on erroneous instructions refused held also properly refused.—Reis v. Epperson (Mo. App.) 353.

(F) Objections and Exceptions.

§ 272. Defendant was not entitled to an instruction to reject testimony of his own witnesses.—Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Sanchez (Tex. Civ. App.) 44.

(G) Construction and Operation.

§ 296. Any error in an instruction, which is corrected in another given instruction, is cured.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Patrick (Ky.) 820; Same v. Picklesimer's Adm'r (Ky.) 822.

§ 296. The error of an instruction presenting a wrong theory of the entire case is not cured by other instructions on the right theory.—Flucks v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 348.

§ 296. In an action against a carrier for injury to live stock, a charge assuming facts held not ground for reversal in view of another charge given.—Fusselman v. Wabash R. Co. (Mo. App.) 1137.

§ 296. A charge as to the burden of proof as to contributory negligence of a passenger in a collision held not calculated to mislead the jury when taken in connection with other portions of the main charge and special charges.—Beaumont Traction Co. v. Happ (Tex. Civ. App.) 610.

§ 296. The omission of an element essential to the cause of action or defense, from one paragraph of the charge, is not material, where it is included in another.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Plummer (Tex. Civ. App.) 942.

Objections for purpose of review, see Appeal and Error, § 219.
Presumptions on appeal, see Appeal and Error, § 931.

§ 392. If the trial court's finding in trespass to try title as to the improvements made upon the land by defendant's grantor were not sufficiently full or definite, plaintiff should have requested a fuller finding.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 403.

§ 394. A finding that a deed conveyed to the grantee all the grantor's title and interest in a league of land, including the land in controversy, did not offend against the statute requiring conclusions of fact and of law to be separate.—Merriman v. Blalack (Tex. Civ. App.) 403.

§ 396. In an action by the buyer of an animal for the price paid and express charges, on the ground that the animal shipped by the seller was not the one sold, a finding held a finding against the seller, notwithstanding the failure of the plaintiff to allege a fact in his petition.—Wright v. Schultz (Ky.) 138.

VI. ACCOUNTING AND COMPENSATION OF TRUSTEE.

§ 315. Where the will creating a trust does not declare that the trustee shall not be compensated for the services rendered in executing the trust, the court may allow him a reasonable compensation therefor.—Patrick v. Patrick (Ky.) 159.

VII. ESTABLISHMENT AND ENFORCEMENT OF TRUST.(C) Actions.

§ 372. In an action against a trustee, held, that matters set forth in the answer were not a plea of payment, but an accounting; that the remedy against him was to surcharge and falsify the items of account thus rendered, and that the burden was on plaintiff to establish a breach of the trust.—Offenstein v. Gehner (Mo.) 715.

§ 372. The presumption is that a trustee has acted in good faith and has done his duty, and the burden is on one suing him for breach of trust to allege and prove the contrary.—Offenstein v. Gehner (Mo.) 715.

I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY OF CONTRACT.

§ 3. A contract held to create the relation of principal and agent, and to authorize the latter to sell the former's real estate, precluding him from becoming the purchaser.—Meek v. Hurst (Mo.) 1022.

§ 18. No title passed under an option to purchase land which required the owners to furnish the option holder a survey and tender an acceptable title within 90 days, where it did not appear that any survey or abstract of title was ever tendered, or that the option holder paid anything for the land.—Little v. Cardwell (Ky.) 799.

III. MODIFICATION OR RESCISSION OF CONTRACT.(A) By Agreement of Parties.

Requirements of statute of frauds as to reconveyance, see Frauds, Statute of, § 63.

(B) Rescission by Vendor.

§ 103. A vendor having permitted a part of the land to be sold off without attempting to son were fixed by recording of a trust deed.—John M. Bonner Memorial Home v. Collin County Nat. Bank (Tex. Civ. App.) 430.

§ 105. On repudiation of a contract of sale, the vendee may remove permanent improvements, if practicable, which do not enhance the value of the premises.—Glass v. Hampton (Ky.) 803.

IV. PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT.

(A) Title and Estate of Vendor.

§ 129. Under a contract of sale calling for a general warranty deed, a purchaser could not be compelled to accept a conveyance, where the legal title is outstanding in a third person.—Pineland Mfg. Co. v. Guardian Trust Co. (Mo. App.) 1133.

(D) Payment of Purchase Money.

Subrogation to rights of vendor by party furnishing money for payment of price, see Subrogation, § 23.

§ 176. Where there was a deficiency in the quantity of land sold of 33½ per cent., equity would grant relief, whether the sale was in gross or by the acre, or whether the loss occurred through fraud or mistake.—Landrum & Adams v. Wells (Ky.) 213.

§ 176. In an action to recover for a deficit in land sold, a contention that the purchaser got all he bargained for and that there was no loss of any part of the property held not pertinent.—Boggs v. Bush (Ky.) 220.

§ 176. In an action to recover for a deficit in lands sold, whether the sale was by the acre or in gross held immaterial.—Boggs v. Bush (Ky.) 220.

§ 176. Under the rule that relief will be denied for a deficit in land sold where the deficit is less than 10 per cent. and granted where 10 or more, a purchaser held entitled to relief for a deficit of 12 acres out of 90.—Boggs v. Bush (Ky.) 220.

V. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PARTIES.

(A) As to Each Other.

Parol evidence to show assumption of Incumbrances, see Evidence, § 419.

§ 196. Where a fee-simple title is conveyed, rents not due until after the conveyance pass to the grantee.—Latham v. First Nat. Bank (Ark.) 992.

(C) Bona Fide Purchasers.

§ 220. Under the law of 1837, a deed which passed no title had no effect, so that, if a description in a subsequent deed to the same land was insufficient to pass title, title would remain in the prior grantee under an unrecorded deed.—Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Kimball (Tex.) 533.

§ 229. A purchaser of realty from a devisee thereof held chargeable with notice of the terms of the will and took only the devisee's title.—Haring v. Shelton (Tex.) 13.

§ 230. A provision in the deed of a junior grantee held not evidence that he had knowledge of a senior conveyance of the land by his grantor to a third person or to show that he suspected it was forged.—Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Kimball (Tex.) 533.

§ 230. A purchaser of land is bound to take notice of the recitals in the patent forming a lisle & Co. v. King (Tex. Civ. App.) 581.

§ 230. A recital in a deed of payment by the grantee is not evidence of such payment to make him a bona fide purchaser as against others claiming under another deed.—William Carlisle & Co. v. King (Tex. Civ. App.) 581.

§ 231. Under Rev. St. 1899, §§ 923, 3399 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 845, 1933), a subsequent purchaser held not entitled to sue to set aside a prior conveyance duly recorded.—Seilert v. McAnally (Mo.) 1064.

§ 231. A purchaser need only examine the record for conveyances made prior to his purchase by his immediate or remote vendor.—Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Kimball (Tex.) 533.

§ 231. The existence of two recorded deeds held sufficient notice to a subsequent purchaser of the rights of one claiming under a recorded, but not duly acknowledged, deed.—Abernathy v. Pickett (Tex. Civ. App.) 579.

§ 231. Under Rev. St. 1895, arts. 4607, 4642, held, that a deed filed for record with the proper officer constitutes notice from that time whether in fact recorded or not.—William Carlisle & Co. v. King (Tex. Civ. App.) 581.

§ 231. A recorded deed, by virtue alone of the record, is constructive notice only of what appears on the face of the deed.—William Carlisle & Co. v. King (Tex. Civ. App.) 581.

§ 231. One held to have notice from records of a sale by an attorney in fact unauthorized by his power, and so not a bona fide purchaser.—Lightfoot v. Horst (Tex. Civ. App.) 606.

§ 233. Under the law of 1837, a conveyance of the same land made after a prior conveyance to another by an unrecorded deed vested in the subsequent grantee the legal title with an equity in the prior grantee to show a superior title by proving notice to the subsequent grantee, or want of a valuable consideration, and, since the latter need not record his deed to give notice to the prior grantee, and he or his vendees were not bound to examine the record for subsequent conveyances, the doctrine of innocent purchasers would not apply.—Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Kimball (Tex.) 533.

§ 242. One claiming under a junior deed taken while Act Dec. 20, 1836 (1 Laws 1836, p. 156, § 40; Hart. Dig. art. 2757), was in force, held to take title as against one claiming under a prior unrecorded deed until the latter proved that the junior grantee was not a purchaser for value without notice; the burden not being on those claiming under the junior grantee to prove that fact.—Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Kimball (Tex.) 533.

§ 252. The recital in a purchase-money note held to constitute a reservation of title in vendor.—Buckley v. Runge (Tex. Civ. App.) 596.

§ 253. The recital in a purchase-money note held to constitute a reservation of an express lien.—Buckley v. Runge (Tex. Civ. App.) 596.

§ 253. A lien created by the recital in a purchase-money note is a contract lien, and not a mere implied vendor's lien.—Buckley v. Runge (Tex. Civ. App.) 596.

§ 265. Land conveyed by the purchaser should be subjected to the payment of vendor's lien notes in the reverse order of its alienation.—John M. Bonner Memorial Home v. Collin County Nat. Bank (Tex. Civ. App.) 430.

§ 265. One held a bona fide purchaser for value acquiring title good as against a lien.—Buckley v. Runge (Tex. Civ. App.) 596.

§ 266. Where the grantee of land orally reconveys it to his grantor, the consideration being the unpaid purchase price, and the agreement is void because not in writing, the original grantor notwithstanding the oral agreement to reconvey retains a lien on the land and its proceeds for the amount of said purchase money unpaid.—Shelton v. Cooksey (Mo. App.) 331.

§ 267. A vendor retaining a lien for the purchase money cannot take a reconveyance of part of the land in part payment, and subsequently convey to a third person, to the prejudice of one who had acquired an equitable interest at the time of such reconveyance, known to the parties at the time.—John M. Bonner Memorial Home v. Collin County Nat. Bank (Tex. Civ. App.) 430.

§ 281. Evidence held not to show that a note was given for a part of the price for which property was originally sold, so as to make it a vendor's lien.—Honaker v. Jones (Tex.) 529.

§ 285. In an action to foreclose a vendor's lien, no judgment except for foreclosure held to be rendered against a defendant succeeding to the rights of the purchaser under the pleadings in the case.—Dolinski v. First Nat. Bank (Tex. Civ. App.) 276.

§ 299. Whether a purchaser purchased for value and without notice of an express lien evidenced by his grantor's purchase-money note reserving an express lien held for the jury.—Buckley v. Runge (Tex. Civ. App.) 596.

§ 299. One asserting a title resulting from the reservation of an express lien on land for the purchase price as against a grantee of the purchaser has the burden of proving that the purchaser had notice of an express lien.—Buckley v. Runge (Tex. Civ. App.) 596.

§ 299. The heirs of a vendor held not barred by laches of their right to recover the land on the superior title based on a reservation of an express lien on the property for the price.—Buckley v. Runge (Tex. Civ. App.) 596.

(B) Actions for Purchase Money.

§ 308. A purchaser may defeat the collection of the purchase money by showing the existence of a superior outstanding title.—Blewitt v. Greene (Tex. Civ. App.) 914.

§ 314. A purchaser, in an executed conveyance of real estate, held not to show facts sufficient to defeat a collection of the price.—Blewitt v. Greene (Tex. Civ. App.) 914.

§ 315. Evidence held to sustain a finding that vendors represented the land sold to contain 157 acres, that the vendee relied thereon, and was damaged by a deficiency.—Landrum & Adams v. Wells (Ky.) 213.

§ 315. A purchaser holding under an executed contract of conveyance held required to show certain facts to defeat the collection of the price.—Blewitt v. Greene (Tex. Civ. App.) 914.

§ 315. A conveyance of land to the purchaser held an executed contract within the rule determining the defenses available in an action for the price.—Blewitt v. Greene (Tex. Civ. App.) 914.

§ 318. The court in directing a purchaser in a contract of sale of real estate to repay a third person the sum deposited by him on his contract with the purchaser for an interest in a part of the real estate of the vendor held not authorized under the evidence to direct the vendor to pay the sum to the purchaser.—Smith v. Pitts (Tex. Civ. App.) 46.

VII. REMEDIES OF PURCHASER.

(A) Recovery of Purchase Money Paid.

§ 334. A purchaser taking a quitclaim held not entitled to recover for failure of consideration.—Goldman v. Hadley (Tex. Civ. App.) 282.

II. NATURAL WATER COURSES.

(D) Diversion.

§ 78. Each riparian owner has for irrigation purposes equal rights in the stream, and water of a stream for irrigation purposes held not confined to a use of the water as it flows by, but he may store it in reservoirs for future use, provided this can be done consistently with the rights of the lower owners.—Stacy v. Delery (Tex. Civ. App.) 300.

§ 78. A lower riparian owner is not entitled to water which has been stored by an upper owner while the stream was running, unless such water also included water which the latter caught and stored by entirely obstructing the flow while the stream was running, to the former's damage.—Stacy v. Delery (Tex. Civ. App.) 300.

§ 87. In an action for unlawfully detaining the water of a stream, the evidence held not to support the allegations of the petition.—Stacy v. Delery (Tex. Civ. App.) 300.

VIII. ARTIFICIAL PONDS, RESERVOIRS, AND CHANNELS, DAMS, AND FLOWAGE.

§ 171. An obstruction in a stream caused by filling it, and resulting in damages to property through water being set back, held a nuisance.—Hedrick v. City of St. Joseph (Mo. App.) 375.

§ 171. Where an embankment maintained by defendant street railway company over a stream, and on which it had laid its tracks, caused an overflow and damage to plaintiff's property, it was immaterial whether defendant's acts in raising the height of and repairing the embankment had any effect in causing or contributing to the backing up of the water.—Hedrick v. City of St. Joseph (Mo. App.) 375.

§ 171. Where defendant maintained a nuisance consisting of an embankment in a stream which caused the water to overflow onto plaintiff's land, it was not necessary in an action for damages therefrom to show that defendant had anything to do with the erection of the embankment; proof of knowledge of its existence and that it obstructed the flow of water sufficing.—Hedrick v. City of St. Joseph (Mo. App.) 375.

§ 178. In an action for injuries from the flowage of land, the measure of damages stated.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Haynes (Ky.) 210.

§ 38. "Insane delusion" rendering one incompetent to execute a will, defined.—Buford v. Gruber (Mo.) 717.

§ 50. An instruction, in a will contest, as to the capacity of the testator to make a will, held proper.—Mowry v. Norman (Mo.) 724.

§ 52. Proof that testator was insane, and had been insane for a long period of years, held to create a presumption that he was insane at the time of the execution of the will, and the burden of establishing a lucid interval was on the party asserting it.—Buford v. Gruber (Mo.) 717.

§ 52. In a will contest, the burden is on the proponent of the will to establish the mental capacity of the testator.—Mowry v. Norman (Mo.) 724.

§ 53. In an action to contest a will on the ground of insanity, evidence of the condition of testator's mind prior to and subsequent to the execution of the will held admissible.—Buford v. Gruber (Mo.) 717.

§ 53. In a will contest, evidence as to the financial condition of the natural objects of testator's bounty held admissible on the issue of mental capacity.—Mowry v. Norman (Mo.) 724.

§ 55. In an action to contest a will on the ground of testator's insanity, evidence held to justify a finding of insanity.—Buford v. Gruber (Mo.) 717.

IV. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

(F) Mistake, Undue Influence, and Fraud.

§ 135. An instruction, in a will contest, as to the effect of undue influence, held to properly state the law.—Mowry v. Norman (Mo.) 724.

§ 163. An instruction, in a will contest, as to undue influence of the beneficiary, held proper.—Mowry v. Norman (Mo.) 724.

§ 164. In a will contest, evidence as to the financial condition of the natural objects of testator's bounty held admissible on the issue of undue influence.—Mowry v. Norman (Mo.) 724.

(G) Revocation and Revival.

§ 170. Evidence held to show that one of two wills executed on the same day was testator's last will.—St. Mary's Orphan Asylum of Texas v. Masterson (Tex. Civ. App.) 587.

V. PROBATE, ESTABLISHMENT, AND ANNULMENT.

Abandonment of contest of will as consideration of contract, see Contracts, § 71.

(E) Jurisdiction, Limitations, and Laches.

§ 200. Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1881, providing that probate of a will may not be had after four years unless applicant was not in default, held that a devisee or purchaser under him may have a will probated as a muniment of title in his favor, and that the "default" within the statute means the default of the applicant himself.—St. Mary's Orphan Asylum of Texas v. Masterson (Tex. Civ. App.) 587.

§ 260. Applicants for probate of a will as a muniment of their title held not in default within Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1881.—St. Mary's Orphan Asylum of Texas v. Masterson (Tex. Civ. App.) 587.

§ 260. Applicants to probate a will as a muniment of their title being entitled to do so under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1881, held not to be deprived of the right by the offer of warranty deeds from the devisees of their grantor to perfect their title.—St. Mary's Orphan Asylum of Texas v. Masterson (Tex. Civ. App.) 587.

§ 260. Where certain applicants are entitled to probate a will as a muniment of their title under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1881, held immaterial whether other applicants were entitled to its probate.—St. Mary's Orphan Asylum of Texas v. Masterson (Tex. Civ. App.) 587.

§ 260. Persons having the custody of a will and refraining for the statutory period from presenting it for probate for mere personal reasons held in default within Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1881, so as not to be entitled to its probate after four years from testator's death.—St. Mary's Orphan Asylum of Texas v. Masterson (Tex. Civ. App.) 587.

§ 260. Where persons in good faith acquire the right to apply for the probate of a will as a muniment of their title under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 1881, relating to probate of wills, the motives inducing them to assert that right are immaterial.—St. Mary's Orphan Asylum of Texas v. Masterson (Tex. Civ. App.) 587.

(H) Evidence.

§ 293. Where two instruments, executed on the same day, were offered for probate, and there was intrinsic evidence to show which was the later one, extrinsic evidence to prove that fact was inadmissible.—St. Mary's Orphan Asylum of Texas v. Masterson (Tex. Civ. App.) 587.

§ 293. In proceedings to probate an alleged will which was not produced in court, a torn draft of the will to be executed by testatrix, containing certain recitals, held irrelevant and immaterial.—Buchanan v. Rollings (Tex. Civ. App.) 962.

§ 297. In proceedings to probate a will not produced in court, testatrix's declarations tend-held to sustain a finding that a testamentary executed the will probated.—Buchanan v. Rollings (Tex. Civ. App.) 962.

§ 306. In proceedings to probate an alleged holographic will which was not produced in court, evidence held to sustain a finding that the will, as probated, was not destroyed by testatrix during her lifetime to revoke it.—Buchanan v. Rollings (Tex. Civ. App.) 962.

(K) Review.

§ 400. In an action by a disinherited child to contest the parent's will on the ground of insanity, the Supreme Court held not authorized to disturb the verdict of the jury by undertaking to say that they placed an improper estimate on the weight of evidence.—Buford v. Gruber (Mo.) 717.

§ 400. An action to contest a will on the ground of the insanity of the testator is an action at law within the rule that, where the evidence is conflicting, the Supreme Court will not undertake to reconcile it.—Buford v. Gruber (Mo.) 717.

VI. CONSTRUCTION.

(A) General Rules.

§ 439. The court in construing a will should aim to ascertain testator's intention.—Patrick v. Patrick (Ky.) 159.

§ 439. In construing wills the object is to ascertain the intention of the testator, and an intention not inconsistent with the rules of law will govern.—Haring v. Shelton (Tex.) 13.

Hobbs (Tex. Civ. App.) 451.

§ 159. In an action against an executor to recover for services rendered testator, certain testimony held to relate to "transactions with" testator, and hence not admissible under 1 Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 2302, while other testimony was admissible thereunder.—Wells v. Hobbs (Tex. Civ. App.) 451.

§ 160. The cashier of a bank, not a party to an action involving the title to a filly, held competent to testify to the execution of a mortgage on the filly by defendant alone in the presence of decedent, through whom plaintiff claimed.—Bailey v. Bailey (Mo. App.) 1099.

§ 176. In an action against an executor for services rendered testator in which defendant's witness testified to a conversation with plaintiff, testimony by plaintiff which merely gave a different version of such conversation was admissible.—Wells v. Hobbs (Tex. Civ. App.) 451.

§ 183. In an action against an executor for services rendered testator, in which defendant's witness testified to a conversation with plaintiff, whether plaintiff's testimony that he had no such conversation with the witness but made other and different statements to him referred to a different conversation than that testified to by the witness held for the trial court's determination under the circumstances.—Wells v. Hobbs (Tex. Civ. App.) 451.

(D) Confidential Relations and Privileged Communications.

§ 188. Where, in an action by plaintiff for injuries received in a railroad wreck, it was competent for him to prove impotency as a result of the accident by testimony that since it occurred he had not been able to have intercourse with his wife.—Epstein v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (Mo. App.) 366.

§ 219. Where three physicians were in attendance upon plaintiff at a hospital, one as 2539), to the principal physician, did not waive his privilege as to the assistants.—Epstein v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (Mo. App.) 366.

III. EXAMINATION.

Harmless error in questions, see Appeal and Error, § 1048.

(A) Taking Testimony in General.

§ 227. It was error to permit a clerk of the probate court to make a statement in the circuit court as to the making and filing of an affidavit for an appeal over objection without swearing him as a witness.—Walker v. Noll (Ark.) 488.

§ 240. A question held leading and properly excluded.—Williamson v. Chicago, R. I. & G. Ry. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 897.

§ 247. In a prosecution for fraudulent registration, evidence held to show that the offense was committed in a specified election precinct.—State v. Tiernan (Mo.) 728.

§ 248. The latter part of the answer to a question whether defendant's grantor claimed the ownership and possession of land that every one knew that he owned it; that it was his ranch and land there—was not responsive, and should have been stricken.—Merriman v. Black (Tex. Civ. App.) 403.

§ 255. In an action for injuries to a street car passenger, if the date of the accident was in doubt, the motorman could have refreshed his memory from the report made by him to the company, though the report was inadmissible.—Gardner v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. (Mo.) 1068.

(B) Cross-Examination and Re-Examination.

§ 277. Defendant's testimony as to confessions held to open a wide field for cross-examination, and to make it clearly proper to cross-examine him fully as to facts stated therein.—State v. Wilson (Mo.) 671.

(C) Privilege of Witness.

§ 297. Under Const. U. S. Amend. 5, and Const. Mo. art. 2, § 23 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 158), a witness held privileged to decline to answer questions asked him as to bets which he had made.—Ex parte Gauss (Mo.) 741.

§ 297. Under Const. U. S. Amend. 5, and Const. Mo. art. 2, § 23 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 158), a witness held privileged to decline to answer a question as to his betting on horse races.—Ex parte Eichel (Mo.) 743.

Review, see Appeal and Error, § 904.

(A) In General.

§ 318. Evidence to support a witness held inadmissible, because of the absence of an effort to impeach the witness.—Welch v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 880.

§ 319. One charged with larceny, having offered herself as a witness, may be impeached.—State v. Hubbard (Mo.) 694.

§ 319. A witness making a statement about an immaterial matter cannot be impeached by

(B) Character and Conduct of Witness.

§ 337. The credit of prosecutrix as a witness may be impeached by evidence that her general reputation for truth or immorality renders her unworthy of belief.—Jackson v. State (Ark.) 101.

§ 337. Under the express provisions of Rev. St. 1899, § 4680 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2549), held that records of former convictions of accused may be introduced to affect her credibility, where she offers herself as a witness.—State v. Hubbard (Mo.) 694.

§ 337. In a prosecution for theft, evidence that accused had been sent to the penitentiary 24 or 25 years before for robbery was not admissible, being too remote; but evidence that he had pleaded guilty to the crime of theft 4 or 5 years before was admissible.—White v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 391.

§ 343. Evidence, to impeach the reputation of a witness, held admissible.—Lindsay v. Bates (Mo.) 682.

§ 351. In an action to replevin property mortgaged to secure a note given for a store account, in which plaintiff's bookkeeper testified that the note had not been paid and defendants claimed it had, certain testimony held inadmissible to impeach the bookkeeper's testimony, in the absence of proper foundation.—McCown v. Wilson (Ark.) 478.

§ 359. In a larceny prosecution, the court records showing accused's former conviction for larceny and the state penitentiary records showing her service of sentence and discharge, were competent to impeach accused's testimony.—State v. Payne (Mo.) 1062.

§ 361. In a prosecution for theft of a mower, testimony by the officer who recovered it from accused's house as to statements by the owner as to how he identified the mower held not admissible; accused not being present when such statements were made.—White v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 391.

(C) Interest and Bias of Witness.

§ 370. The testimony as to the friendship between a state's witness and decedent is immaterial, especially where the witness states that he was friendly with decedent.—Welch v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 880.

§ 372. Accused can show that a state's witness had requested accused to furnish money to pay witness' fines, and became angered when he refused to do so.—O'Neal v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 386.

§ 373. In a prosecution for rape, evidence of disclosures of accused to witness concerning the alleged familiarity of M. with prosecutrix held inadmissible, in the absence of proof that the disclosures were brought to the knowledge of the prosecutrix, or that they procured or induced the prosecution.—Bader v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 555.

§ 377. A witness for accused may not be supported by proof that on a former trial she had been summoned as a witness and had testified for the state.—Welch v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 880.

(D) Inconsistent Statements by Witness.

§ 379. A statement by a witness that his testimony could easily cause plaintiff to win or lose may be proved to impeach his credibility.—Rippeteo v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 314.
